Dear Secretary Goldberg,

Please find our Written Comment for the Title IX public hearings on Title IX on behalf of Champion Women, a nonprofit providing legal advocacy for girls and women in sports. Our focus areas at Champion Women include equal play, such as traditional Title IX compliance in athletic departments, sexual harassment, abuse and assault, as well as employment, pregnancy and LGBT discrimination within sport.

I was recently appointed to a Congressional Commission on the U.S. Olympic and Paralympic Committee by Senator Maria Cantwell. The Commission will examine the Olympic Movement and recommend statutory changes to Congress. I led an 11-year effort to protect athletes from sexual abuse in club and Olympic sports, that is, sport not associated with schools. I am co-Chair of the Committee to Restore Integrity to the USOPC, or "Team Integrity" where I galvanized the sport, child protection, and civil rights communities in support of two new federal laws, the Protecting Young Victims from Sexual Abuse and SafeSport Authorization Act, signed into law in February, 2018, and the Empowering Olympians, Paralympians and Amateur Athletes Act of 2020, signed in November of 2020.

I am a civil rights lawyer. I have been teaching Sports Law and Administration for 20 years. I have testified in Congress numerous times on the topic of gender equity in athletics and written numerous scholarly and lay articles. My book, co-authored with Andrew Zimbalist, Ph.D., EQUAL PLAY, TITLE IX AND SOCIAL CHANGE, flushes out the history of the law and the many battles waged to get the strong statute, regulations and case law. I was the lead author of PREGNANT AND PARENTING STUDENT-ATHLETES; RESOURCES AND MODEL POLICIES, published by the NCAA. I currently serve as an expert witness in Title IX athletics, sexual abuse, violence and harassment cases and writes amicus briefs representing athletic organizations in precedent-setting litigation.

I was on the U.S. National swimming team for nine years, qualifying for two Olympics, winning three gold and one silver at the 1984 Olympics.

Sports Illustrated Magazine listed me as one of the most influential people in the history of Title IX, and on their list of "the most powerful, most influential and most outstanding women in sports right now—the game-changers who are speaking out, setting the bar and making a difference."

The attached Written Comments are part of our long-standing work to fulfill the promise of Title IX; for girls and women to enjoy equal athletic opportunities, scholarships and treatment at schools that receive our tax dollars. It is as important for the community broadly to see equality in the one place where schools formally sex-segregate its educational opportunities, as it is for the participants in that educational sports program. Champion Women is also a member of the Women's Sports Policy Working Group; we have included some of the relevant policies for transgender inclusion, given the sex discrimination girls and women face in athletics. Our first nine pages represent national trends in Title IX athletics sex discrimination. The 56-page appendix breaks down the data for opportunities, scholarship dollars and treatment, by state and then individual schools.

Please do not hesitate to reach out if I can provide the Department of Education with further information or if you are interested in our suggestions for remedies.

Dear Acting Assistant Secretary Goldberg,

Champion Women provides legal advocacy for girls and women in sports. One of our major focus areas is ending sex discrimination in school-based athletic departments. We do considerable research on athletic departments, measuring how they treat their male and female athletes. We share our research with letters to the NCAA, athletic conferences, college and university presidents and athletic directors.[1] We host numerous educational programming on sex discrimination in athletics,[2] and we create communities for current students to bring legal action against their schools to end sex discrimination.[3]

49 years after the passage of Title IX, and collegiate women athletes in every state are still facing intentional sex discrimination from their school's athletic departments.

Passed in 1972, the text of Title IX reads as follows:

> No person in the United States shall, based on sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.
> 20 U.S. Code § 1681

Sex Discrimination by the NCAA is Inexcusably Flagrant.

Sex discrimination against women in collegiate athletics was on full display in March at the NCAA March Madness Basketball Tournament. The NCAA intentionally provided its women's basketball players with second-class treatment by every measurable criterion. Some of the areas where these were particularly egregious were:

- The NCAA refused to allow the women to use the valuable "March Madness" trademark on its website, in social media, emblazoned on basketball courts, or on apparel.
- The NCAA provided women with less accurate Covid tests.
- The NCAA provided women with pre-packaged, almost inedible meals while the NCAA served men option-rich buffets.
- The NCAA provided women with athlete swag bags were incomparably substandard as compared with the men's.
- The NCAA provided no photos or interview transcripts for the first two rounds of the women's tournament, while providing them for all rounds of the men's.

Probably most important, women's wins are not recognized with NCAA pay-outs to their universities, including zero pay-out for wins. Meanwhile each win in the men's tournament brings a $2.02 million payout over six years. While one can argue that the men's win should bring a larger payout than a women's win, with their higher Nielsen ratings and ticket revenue, it is factually incorrect to claim that the women generate no revenue and morally indefensible to claim that their performance merits zero payout. Indeed, despite the absence of proper promotion, the women's games experience both robust attendance and ratings, with 4.1 million viewers for the final Arizona v. Stanford game. Economist Daniel Rascher, Ph.D., with the financial firm OSKR, estimates that women's basketball collectively generated collectively almost a billion dollars in the 2018–2019 academic year, when he studied the NCAA's self-reported numbers.[4]

Athletes took to social media to point out how they were being treated. Yet despite viral videos receiving multi-million views, despite elite coaches voicing outrage, despite the sports news cycle dedicated to the NCAA's second-class treatment of its women basketball players, the NCAA continued the same types of sex discrimination in NCAA volleyball, softball, and women's golf championships.[5]

While schools are responsible for the sexist treatment their students are receiving at championship events, (schools cannot hide behind the NCAA's conduct), it is difficult for athletes to find a legal remedy to hold the NCAA accountable.

Between 1993 and 2010, the NCAA measured sex discrimination in their members schools and held members accountable through a process called "Certification." Mark Emmert ended this requirement when he was hired in 2010 and the numbers speak for themselves; since then, schools have been moving away from gender equality.

The NCAA is the largest college athletic association in the country with the most elite collegiate athletic performances. It is imperative the membership organization be held accountable for treating men and women athletes equally in all their championships.

NCAA Treatment Mirrors the Intentional Sex Discrimination in Colleges and Universities. The NCAA's sexist treatment is an extension of the discrimination that women are experiencing at their colleges. As Champion Women has been trumpeting for close to a year on our website TitleIXSchools.com - the aggregate data tracking sex discrimination on a national level are staggering. To put these numbers into perspective, 183,130 athletes equates to about 7,325 new teams, or 3.5 new teams per school receiving federal funds, assuming an above-the-mean number of athletes per team of 25.[6] In addition to opportunities to compete, women are being denied almost a billion dollars in athletic college scholarships every year. As such, hundreds of thousands of women are being denied the professional benefits flowing from a sport opportunity; girls who play sports earn 8% higher wages compared to their non-sport playing counterparts,[7] and research has found that 96% of C-suite women were athletes.[8]

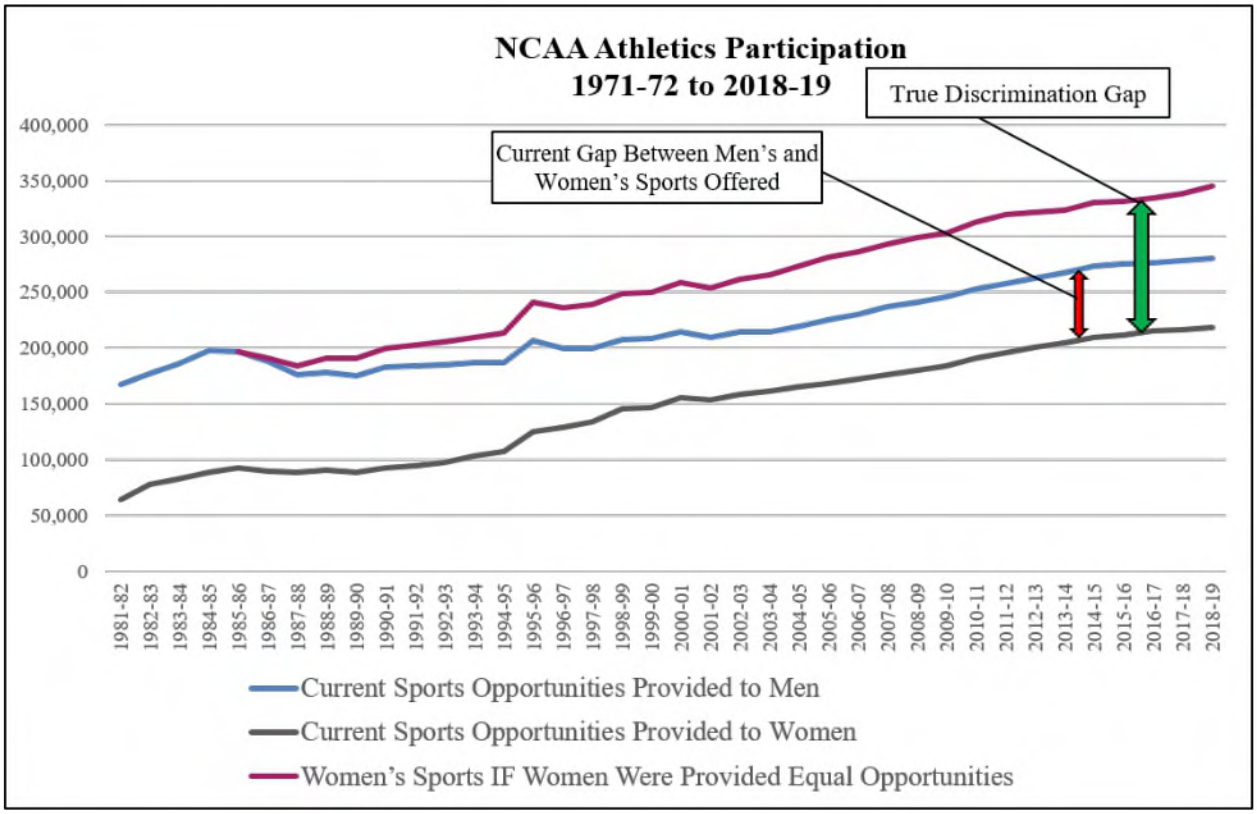
The Passage of Time Will Not Remedy the Sex Discrimination in Athletics.

In the past 15 years, the gap between men's and women's participation equality has grown by 27%. In 10 of the last 15 years, colleges and universities have added more participation opportunities for men than women.

The True Discrimination Gap (see green arrow on graph below) represents the number of opportunities women should have if schools provided equal opportunities. As you can see, women are being denied almost a third of the opportunities that schools should be providing them under long-standing federal law, OCR regulations and case law. The gaps for NCAA member schools has widened, from 100,308 opportunities in the 2001–02 school year to 126,974 in the 2018–19 school year. Again, that gulf is growing; a 27% increase in sex discrimination over the past two decades during NCAA President Mark Emmert's tenure.



The following two tables list every state and the corresponding data measuring participation, athletic scholarships and treatment and benefits. It is segmented to by state to demonstrate how the numbers add up to the bigger picture of sex discrimination on the national level.

Each state and school is broken out in the attached Appendix. All the information can also be found at www.TitleIXSchools.com

Women cannot escape the sex discrimination in athletics. It exists in the rich schools, resource-challenged schools, big state schools, small private schools, in Christian and other religious schools, historically black colleges and universities, the Ivy League, throughout the NCAA and Divisions I, II, and III, the NAIA, NJCAA, NCCAA, CCCAA, USCAA. Sex discrimination is rampant in the most athletically-elite and the most participation-oriented athletic departments. It exists throughout the country, in the North, East, South and Western states, in blue states and red states.

Sex Discrimination in Athletics is Uniquely Easy to Measure.

BEWARE! University defense lawyers will tell you that our data is incorrect or, alternatively, that their school is complying with Prong 3 of the 1979 3-part test; that the school is meeting the "interests and abilities" of their students.[9]

First, our data comes directly from the schools, as required by the Equity in Athletics Disclosure Act, passed in 1994.[10] The purpose of the Act was to provide transparency, so that families could ascertain if it was (is) fair to ask for more opportunities for girls and women. If the data the school submits to the Department of Education is incorrect, schools should make sure they provide correct information that demonstrates the athletic departments provides men and women with equal opportunities, as measured by the proportion of males and females at the university matching the proportion of men and women in the athletic department. If the Department of Education requires different data to measure Title IX compliance, then Congress should change the EADA requirements.

Second, meeting Prong 3 – demonstrating that the school is satisfying the interests and abilities of the students – is not to be presumed; measuring the student interest and ability is quite involved.[11] Partly, it is difficult for a school to meet the test precisely because girls and women are interested in sport. While over 60% of high school students are athletes, higher ed provides just 8.66% of men with a sports experience and 5.13% of women with a college experience. NCAA Division 1, the most elite, well-resourced athletic programs, offers even fewer opportunities to it's male and female students, with 4.18% for men and just 2.96% for women.

The legal test for meeting student "interest and ability" is common sense, like most of Title IX and athletics. It looks for interest by the underrepresented sex as expressed through these indicators, among others:

- requests by current and admitted students that a particular sport be added;
- requests that an existing club sport be elevated to intercollegiate team status;
- participation in particular club or intramural sports;

[11] 1979 OCR Policy Interpretation, Supra, note 9.

- interviews with current and admitted students, coaches, administrators, and others regarding interest in particular sports;
- results of questionnaires completed by current and admitted students regarding interests in particular sports; and
- participation in particular interscholastic sports by admitted students.

To date, no school has been able to show in court that they were meeting the interests and abilities of the women on campus without meeting Prong 1.[12] Typically when the factors above are completed, they signal to a school which sports to add, not whether to add a sport.

Despite the strength of the statute, OCR Regulations, and case law, practically speaking, the lone mechanism for ending sex discrimination in athletic departments is civil litigation, brought by current students. Champion Women has been behind initiating most of the current legal efforts: William & Mary, Dartmouth, University of Iowa, Michigan State University, Frenso State University, San Diego State University, Stanford University and more. It is notable that every school told its students that it was providing men and women with equal opportunities, and that it was complying with Title IX, when they were clearly not. But putting the burden on current students to remedy sex discrimination in competitive athletic is poor policy.

One of the greatest tragedies of sex discrimination in collegiate sports is that most women who are not recruited to play college sports, who do not get to play in college, or do not receive an athletic scholarship are unaware that they are being discriminated against; they simply think they were not good enough, that they didn't work hard enough. This false self-assessment is counter to the purposes of Title IX, to empower girls and women through education.

Transgender Inclusion Should Prioritize Science, Playing Safety, Competitive Fairness, and Current Sex Discrimination in Athletics.

Champion Women is a member of the Women's Sports Policy Working Group. The materials – the rationale, the science, the model statutes and regulations, are available here: https://womenssportspolicy.org/, and separate WSPWG comments have been submitted.

The Women's Sports Policy Working Group proposals create a middle way between those that insist on full exclusion or full inclusion of transgender athletes in girls and women's sports. Our proposals are based on science, rather than politics or bigotry, and aim to include whenever it is consistent with the science-based current rationale for sex-segregated sport.

As the OCR considers inclusion of transgender athletes in competitive school sports, Champion Women asks that the "girls' and women's sports" categories be defined. The category must have meaning before considering the rationale for transgender inclusion into the girls' and women's category, the same way that weight classes, age classes, equipment classes are meaningful segmented sports categories.

[12] Both men and women have an almost insatiable desire for collegiate sports opportunities. Schools would almost always find it difficult to meet this standard.

- Sports are not sex-segregated to remedy past discrimination.[13] Women's performances are 8–20% - up to 50% - behind men not due to sexism, but science. These are differences that should be celebrated, not blurred.
- Restrooms are sex-segregated as a cultural politeness, not biology. Co-ed bathrooms are routine.
- Sex-segregation in sport is ubiquitous world-wide, except for sports where testosterone does not create a performance advantage, like sailing, equestrian, and motor sports.
- We sex-segregate sports to ensure half the population – girls and women – have equal opportunities to participate, to set records, to earn college scholarships, prize money, endorsements, podium spots, and equal honor and respect.
- Sex-segregation is required for girls and women to have equal opportunities in competitive sport. Again, we should be celebrating these differences between the sexes, not trying to erase them.

Trans girls and women who can demonstrate they have mitigated their sex-linked advantage should compete in the "girls' and women's" competitive sports categories. Inclusion does not need to involve genital exams or public disclosure of private medical information. Inclusion can be accomplished with the standard pre-season medical eligibility form denoting biological sex and hormone treatments over the relevant period of time, if any.

Conclusion: Ending Sex Discrimination in Athletics is Achievable.

On June 23, 2022, Title IX will celebrate its 50th anniversary. We are hoping that with Congressional help, we will be able to share good news about how schools are remedying their sex discrimination in athletic departments.

Based on our decades of experience with sex discrimination in athletics, we have several ideas to remedy the sex discrimination in intercollegiate athletics. We look forward to discussing our research with you, and how to remedy this easy-to-measure sex discrimination.

Sincerely,

[13] Every federal appeals court that has examined the "affirmative action" or "quota" issue has concluded that Title IX and the OCR's interpreting regulations do not constitute reverse discrimination and do not constitute a quota law. See e.g., Cohen v. Brown University, 101 F.3d 155 at 170 (1st Cir.1996) ("No aspect of the Title IX regime at issue in this case - inclusive of the statute, the relevant regulation, and the pertinent agency documents - mandates gender-based preferences or quotas, or specific timetables for implementing numerical goals.")
