

From: funding@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). As a woman who was there when initially we got Title IX, I am heart broken and appalled that you would consider harming the futures of so many young women! It is unconscionable. There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lisa Hazelton

(b)(6)

From: lbalmain21@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Laura G Balmain (b)(6)

From: carlanddonna@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Donna Graham (b)(6)

From: pastormiklas@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pastor David Miklas (b)(6)

From: boblitz3@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Eternity is a long time. I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Sincerely, Mr. Robert Baublitz

(b)(6)

From: jlm3291@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Joni Mogle (b)(6)

From: ellenpearson1984@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Ellen Pearson (b)(6)

From: micki.matteson@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Leslie Matteson (b)(6)

From: sarah@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sarah Klein (b)(6)

From: roymarylou@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pastor Roy A Johnson (b)(6)

From: gchova@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. As a physician I follow the literature and am very concerned about the infusion of transgender ideology rather than science in our schools. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! George Chovanes (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: rschrock1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Ryan Schrock (b)(6)

From: dennis.barta@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are several important factors to consider as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal authority you have to enact any measures you may decide to pursue. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies regarding gender identity and sexual orientation are forced on parents and students from the federal level. If you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary decision-makers of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Finally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not prevent transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I ask that you keep these factors in mind and allow them to guide your thinking as you review Title IX. Thank you! Dennis Barta (b)(6)

From: pam@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. I find it very troubling how sexual identity and gender awareness are being thrust into the education systems of this country. I do not understand why topics addressing sexual identity and orientation are being taught in K-12, many times without parental knowledge. Topics such as these should be discussed between parents and children and not between educators and students. I also find it very discriminatory to allow transgender females in girls' sports. Girls cannot compete equally with boys athletically and this closes many opportunities for girls to qualify for a college sport scholarship if there is boy playing on their team. Thank you! Mrs. Pamela Wells (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: ssteele@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Sharon Steele (b)(6)

From: beknaup@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Ed Knaup; Beth E Knaup (b)(6)

From: dklack@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some key considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an "abuse of power" by the Biden administration. Education is a "state and local matter", protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there needs to be extensive consideration given to "parental rights". Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like "Queer Theory" being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Donna K Lackman (b)(6)

From: judywalton8@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Judy Walton Saunders (b)(6)

From: anitajbryant@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Anita Bryant [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: 3john2sledge@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Irina Sledge (b)(6)

From: Mrs.christinegregg@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Christine Gregg (b)(6)

From: jessie_lion@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jessica Gutierrez (b)(6)

From: fastkrocket1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Charles Krick (b)(6)

From: pastor@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pastor Douglas Joseph (b)(6)

From: emilejb@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Emile Burgess (b)(6)

From: waitela@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations regarding title IX. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education! Ideology are forced on parents and students from the federal level is unacceptable. Parental rights are of the utmost importance. Parents are the primary source of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn not be indoctrinated. Queer Theory should never taught to or forced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents and doctors for guidance, not the school system. Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women is far more important for society than kowtowing to alleged transgender persons seeking political access to our children via the public school system. Please allow these legitimate concerns of parents to guide your actions. Thank you! Mrs. Valerie Waite

(b)(6)

From: elizabethbruders7@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Elizabeth Bruders (b)(6)

From: themcleroys@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lendy McLeroy (b)(6)

From: mikepata2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Michael Pata (b)(6)

From: forgiven@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sam Morgan (b)(6)

From: hjp2quadz@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. We are in absolute agreement with the above stated opinions and concerns and fully support parental rights which should never be overridden by the Department of Education. Furthermore allowing males to participate in female sports opens the door for grave permanent physical injury and also for abuse by sexual predators. These are totally unacceptable and should never be tolerated in our society. Thank you! Mr. James Pachaud (b)(6)

From: ckcaldwell@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Connie Caldwell (b)(6)

From: janscarb2002@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jan Scarbrough (b)(6)

From: everettbaker@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, we should all stick to the science. All men have two Y chromosomes in every cell of their bodies. And all women have an X and a Y chromosome in every cell of their bodies. This is just as Jesus our creator says in Mark 10:6-7, "...at the beginning of creation God 'made them male and female. For this reason a man will leave his father and mother and be united to his wife, Secondly, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Charles Baker (b)(6)

From: brian cari3@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Carisa Borsa (b)(6)

From: servantofgod4@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Carol Erdmann (b)(6)

From: elliserin5@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Erin Gulley (b)(6)

From: dhoehl@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Sincerely, Mr. Debbie Hoehl (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: pboed525@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Paula Boedigheimer (b)(6)

From: carm@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Thank you for taking time to read and consider for the sake of our youth! I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Carmen Roberts (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: knsdavis5@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kathleen Davis (b)(6)

From: dvicars37@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Damon Vicars (b)(6)

From: jackiehendricks64@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Jackie Hendricks (b)(6)

From: curtis.hervey@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Captain Curtis Hervey , Ret. (b)(6)

From: cindypaul1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Cindy Paul (b)(6)

From: sharileesuydam@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Shari Suydam (b)(6)

From: hultstrandj@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Title IX was put in place for a reason; the changes you are considering reverse many of the protections and improvements for women's sports. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Jerry Hultstrand

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: runchap@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. David Ernst (b)(6)

From: secessna@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX, please consider the following. Please assess your legal ability to pursue certain measures and do not abuse power in terms of issuing policy regarding gender identity and sexual orientation . Education is a state and local matter. Please protect parental rights and avoid inserting content that may offend parents. Additionally, please keep Title IX protection for girls' sports based on sex, not gender identity. Biological males and females need to compete separately Thank you! Susan Cessna (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: i_live4fun@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Elaine Ries (b)(6)

From: billzukoski@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Regarding the U.S. Department of Education's OCR announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). The LGBTQetc. plan to indoctrinate our youth with their agenda and have it taught in schools is wrong. Please keep politics out of education and let families work with the local school board to determine what is taught in their schools. Please listen to common sense and decency and keep boys out of girls sports and girls out of boys sports. Thank you for taking these comments into consideration! Bill Zukoski (b)(6)

From: gswicker@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Garry Wicker (b)(6)

From: bbiehler@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Barbara Biehler (b)(6)

From: durmfanger@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Please evaluate what legal ability the animation and its departments have to undertake any measures they ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. I would like to see extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education. They send their children to school to learn. Controversial topics taught to or practiced on their children without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Miss Elizabeth Yarmark (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: wphunterjd@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

John Dille [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: d-mbarker@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pastor David Barker (b)(6)

From: cnwilcott@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Curtis Wilcott (b)(6)

From: jeff4667@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jeff Brinkley (b)(6)

From: tommykirby777@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Tom Kirby [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: bobandmarybaptist@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Robert Baptist (b)(6)

From: chrishanie@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Chris Hanie (b)(6)

From: cnwilcott@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Laura Wilcott (b)(6)

From: pavelivanov@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you in response to the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Education is not enumerated in the Constitution and is, thus, a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Each state is Constitutionally free to determine its own path in ALL matters involving education, especially at the primary and secondary levels. Parents and local leadership should be making all decisions regarding what is taught in our public and charter schools and the manner in which teaching is applied. While topics involving moral and religious consideration, such as sexual orientation and gender identification, sexual reassignment, and various "isms", are ubiquitous in much of media, these conversations belong in homes between parents and children when minors are involved. Parents must retain authority over their minor children, and most certainly should not involve federal manipulation. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex (presence or absence of the x-chromosome), not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pavel and JulieAnn Ivanov (b)(6)

From: jejlhj@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

John Johnson (b)(6)

From: cmosher2003@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kelly and Edythe Mosher (b)(6)

From: jalgee460@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. John Algee (b)(6)

From: moser.lauren@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Lauren Moser (b)(6)

From: dspl174martha@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

DJ Abbamont (b)(6)

From: hwcoser@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Harry Cosner (b)(6)

From: pammylynn7@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pam Burdick (b)(6)

From: honeybear1067@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

David Mcadams (b)(6)

From: bbingen@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). The very idea that previously parents could not even send an aspirin to school for their child to take and now just about anyone can give them medications, treatments, set them up for surgeries and not even tell their parents is very very scary. Perhaps someone ruining your children's and grandchildren's bodies and lives will open your eyes. As much as I don't want harm to come to your children/grandchildren, I hope you have this opportunity for the many lives it may save. As for your campaign to reverse E.R.A., may the women in your life become so unhappy that your lives are made eternally miserable. I hope you will think about the women and children in your lives as you review of the Title IX regulations. How about looking at what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you may decide to pursue. Any rules made by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal interference. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. If you proceed, there ought to be a lot of consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. The people/taxpayers who pay your salaries cannot afford to put their children in private schools and wield influence with large donations, etc to protect their kids from the weird stuff being taught in public schools. Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and should be based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you will think about these comments and suggestions in your minds and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thanks. BeBe Bingen (Martha A) (b)(6)

From: dstock@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dannon Stock (b)(6)

From: kais1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Sandra Kaiser (b)(6)

From: joepao@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Joe Paoella (b)(6)

From: elementald@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Brian Rutledge (b)(6)

From: stevegoodwin49@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Stephen Goodwin (b)(6)

From: cooperdancer@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Anne Cooper (b)(6)

From: kmholtom@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Katherine Holtom (b)(6)

From: doldlabs@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. George Dold (b)(6)

From: trendalyn@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing out of deep concern for the future of my grandchildren and future generations. Please consider the long term effects of decisions to be made regarding your grandchildren and mine. I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Trenda Lynch (b)(6)

From: sonbeam77@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Edward Wright (b)(6)

From: Linda@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Linda Moreau (b)(6)

From: momof2blsdbyz@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gina Prentice (b)(6)

From: Thomas7777@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Irma C Thomas (b)(6)

From: megganhorn@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has NO place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. It's simple - don't program my kid. Please let me know if this is being taught so we can begin homeschooling. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. They can have their own teams as boys and girls do. If there are even enough.... Because it seems it's such a small amount. Protect them all. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Meggan Horn (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: david@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Somehow we have lost the word "perversion" in our national conscience. I absolutely support the separation of males and females in sports, but fair funding should be a mandate. Likewise, the X and Y chromosomes are the only determinate of sex; any physical alteration is man-made and perverse. Yet, in the classroom, all should be equals and protected while obtaining their education. Simple, yes! Except, respecting private school rights of self-determination, should likewise be respected. Thank you! David Sibley

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: marroos@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Marlys Roos (b)(6)

From: nettymail72@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Annette Edewaard (b)(6)

From: bill@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Bill Loveless (b)(6)

From: jj_ess@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jeffrey Essmann (b)(6)

From: melvinshirley@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Melvin Michael (b)(6)

From: spbsexton@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Susan Sexton (b)(6)

From: Nbragenzer@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Nicole

From: billybee41@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Billy Beevers (b)(6)

From: flfoskey@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs, Edward Foskey (b)(6)

From: leelan4me@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Leeann Linam (b)(6)

From: Pa31650@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Paul Atkins (b)(6)

From: dmossbarger@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. There ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Federal employees do not have the right to enforce their ideologies on the American public. Thank you! Reverend Diane Mossbarger

(b)(6)

From: ekurie@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you concerning the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, give extensive consideration to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and most do not consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children confused about gender must be guided by their parents so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you. Edith Kurie [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: debramaxtonmiller@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Debra Miller (b)(6)

From: tracyabennett@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Tracy Bennett (b)(6)

From: bcshriner7@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Bobby Shriner (b)(6)

From: pam@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Pamela Wells (b)(6)

From: sherrybogenholm@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sherry Bogenholm (b)(6)

From: jeg_1974@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Jennifer Gampp (b)(6)

From: chuckstx@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Charles Corle (b)(6)

From: james@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Reverend James Wittenberger (b)(6)

From: tabragram@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Michael Gonski (b)(6)

From: larryliz11@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Larrimore Anderson (b)(6)

From: jmr511@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Jennifer Ring (b)(6)

From: mark82761@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mark Haller [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: miriamnestler@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, My husband and I are writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights announcement of a public hearing to gather information in order to improve enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972. Please consider these things: Do you have legal ability to do what you finally decide? Aren't any new rules by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation an abuse of power? Isn't education a state and local matter? When ideas are forced on parents and students by the feds isn't that politics run amuck? Parents are the ones who decide about their children's education. They send their children to school and should not have to face controversial topics like Queer Theory being practiced on their children. This would be a violation of public trust and parental rights if done without parental consent. Parents are the ones to guide their children if they have questions about their identity! Also, males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, privacy and risk of physical injury. Transgender athletes can still compete in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. We don't have to take rights away from women to do this! The women of America are watching!! I am confident that I reflect the attitudes of the great majority of the American people. Please remember this when you make any further decisions! Thank you for your consideration of my letter! Mrs. Miriam C Nestler (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: dftillman@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

David Tillman (b)(6)

From: pjrock@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Patsy P Rockett Jr. (b)(6)

From: bryanwmorrison1958@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Bryan Morrison (b)(6)

From: lingling2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, The notion that biology does not count in sports is sheer nonsense. There is no way boys should compete against girls in sports. I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Eric P Smith (b)(6)

From: stephanie.reding@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Stephanie Reding (b)(6)

From: bimmermom135is@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Denise Baker (b)(6)

From: tamera.grady@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Tamera Grady (b)(6)

From: faithden2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dennis Smith (b)(6)

From: luryden@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). I sincerely hope you will pay attention to the parents, grandparents, teachers and citizens deeply concerned about the mandates proposed by President Biden regarding girls and women's sports and the biological difference between them that is not taken into consideration. We were created as two different sexes not 3; male and female. Biologically different in muscles, skeletal and strength. To change a boys physical appearance is just that, outward appearance! The insides regarding muscles, skeletal and strength remain the same. To include transgender males into female sports is not only unfair but it changes the rules in favor of the transgender male. It puts the rights of the LGBT, trans community above the rights of those in their original bodies given to them by God. Lura M. Ryden 3315 Peachtree Industrial Blvd. #102 Duluth, GA 30096 There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Lura Ryden (b)(6)

From: karenzukoski@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Karen Zukoski (b)(6)

From: rharper56@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Roger Harper (b)(6)

From: karen.putnam0424@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Karen Putnam (b)(6)

From: fuhrmannr@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Carrie Fuhrmann (b)(6)

From: mooredanielle2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Danielle Moore (b)(6)

From: tamij1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Tami McClain [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: jdewolf@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

James DeWolf (b)(6)

From: Richardson10@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Ron Richardson (b)(6)

From: shawnimcmichael@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Shawnia McMichael (b)(6)

From: lys.tig@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Carolyn Lystig (b)(6)

From: roy_karen@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Roy Burmeister (b)(6)

From: jackjoeywoj@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jack J Wojciech (b)(6)

From: mmcadory@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Melinda McAdory (b)(6)

From: nick.diann@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ralph Armstrong (b)(6)

From: bkenneth27@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Reverend Kenneth Boyd (b)(6)

From: yvettekurtgis@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Please protect our children! Thank you! Mrs. Yvette Kurtgis (b)(6)

From: riversong51@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pastor Denny Klaja (b)(6)

From: 8pinksfamily@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Christine Pinkman (b)(6)

From: emadfelias@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Emad Elias (b)(6)

From: jackblk171@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jackson Black (b)(6)

From: ply4spd340@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

John Leake (b)(6)

From: danag@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dana Glaviano (b)(6)

From: rieplay3@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Marie Nuhn (b)(6)

From: tiffanyks38@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Tiffany Smith (b)(6)

From: bushjulie92@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Julie Bush (b)(6)

From: Bucksawyer169@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Buck Sawyer (b)(6)

From: f67lpjc12ky26pc@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

John Cooper (b)(6)

From: markyfooster@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Mark Foster (b)(6)

From: 13davidjc@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs Deanna Carman (b)(6)

From: aef172@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Adrian Fardy (b)(6)

From: Awcarlson85@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Andrew Carlson (b)(6)

From: janelle.russell@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Janelle Russell (b)(6)

From: banderl@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jonathan Anderl (b)(6)

From: jeptp@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Paul Pease (b)(6)

From: abevin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. As the parent of a daughter who participated in sports, I am appalled about the attempt to force biological women to compete against transgender biologic men who "self identify" as women. The proposed changes to Title IX would removal any hope of fair competition in women's sports, and is blatant discrimination against women. As I spread this reality with my friends, colleagues and acquaintances, they are outraged, as is also none other than the first lesbian to win Wimbledon, Martina Navratilova (who wrote an Op-ed against transgender males participating in women's sports). This decision will have enormous negative blow-back for the Democratic Party as more women (who are more likely to vote progressive) realize they are being sacrificed on the alter of the latest fad. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Avery Bevin, MD

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: bcshriner7@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Bobby Shriner (b)(6)

From: skw1657@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sandy Williams (b)(6)

From: nicole@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Crystal Holliman (b)(6)

From: angeleyes13@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. To continue to disrespect the rights of parents and females in generals like this is an offense against us all and we the people WILL push back against the illegality and unethical nature of such actions. Thank you! Mrs. D. Lynn Alford (b)(6)

From: banderl@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. William Anderl [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: bob.staples@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

bob Staples (b)(6)

From: Paula@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Paula Bagby (b)(6)

From: winkers@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. May God bless and lead you to protect all children and support parents as the primary educators of their children and do NOT force LGBTQ+ curriculum and allow biological males to compete against biological females or use the private facilities designated for females. It is really only common sense. Thank you! Mrs Marie Winker (b)(6)

From: surfinsand@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Cheryl Bendix (b)(6)

From: jsc55@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Stephen Chitty (b)(6)

From: cjones28213@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mary Jones (b)(6)

From: cathyg924@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Please give some thought to how you can impact our children's lives for the better instead of the confusion that is going on at this time. Thank you! Mrs. Cathy Glowacz

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: maparkinson@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Mary Ann Parkinson (b)(6)

From: solhouse5@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Camille Solberg (b)(6)

From: Cehamiltonb@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Corah Schreiter (b)(6)

From: lowmips@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Reginald Campbell (b)(6)

From: annette.mct8@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Thank you for requesting public comments regarding the US Department of Education's enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. I believe it is unfair to girls in sports to have to compete against transgender females who are biological males. Biological females are already losing scholarships because of this. Additionally, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents should be the primary decision makers of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that families can address the situation as their family beliefs. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Annette McTiernan (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: lynnettebeck@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lynnette Beck (b)(6)

From: d.stl@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Diana St. Laurent (b)(6)

From: prekt3@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Theresa Connolly (b)(6)

From: ralphsirvent@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ralph Sirvent (b)(6)

From: ruthmorgan@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jerry D Morgan (b)(6)

From: jjl8@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. James J. Luca (b)(6)

From: rjb11@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robert Brenner (b)(6)

From: miss_vickee_54@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Victoria Self (b)(6)

From: jborden@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jeff Borden (b)(6)

From: lmeany77@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Lynn Meany (b)(6)

From: snoles25@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sandra Noles (b)(6)

From: rob.callicotte@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Rob Callicotte (b)(6)

From: xxtmg2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Teresa Gorman (b)(6)

From: Debbie@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Debbie Schreve (b)(6)

From: pjkenedy44@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Priscilla Kennedy [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: ronvazquez@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Thank you for reading my message regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. As parents, we are the primary arbiters of our children's education; we send our children to school to learn and do not consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on our children. Doing so without our consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Ronald Vazquez { (b)(6) }

From: jeanne7kestinvs@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Rhonda Kestin (b)(6)

From: deaconbyrne@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

DN. Robert Byrne (b)(6)

From: darnash@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Darrel Nash (b)(6)

From: nwwilson1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Norman Wilson (b)(6)

From: trustnwait@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. And the current administration has been very vocal in pushing their gender identity agenda. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. These topics have no place in public education. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females are biologically different and need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. That is a fair solution. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mrs. Monica Presser (b)(6)

From: singerjjay@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). First, you should evaluate what legal ability and liability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Also, I want to add that it seems to me this entire issue makes no sense biologically. There is no true science that supports the arguments being made in favor of biological males being assigned to women's athletic teams, unless the goal is to destroy women's athletic teams and athletic scholarship opportunities. To me, what we are looking at is someone's fantasy to permit a small number of teenage boys to have direct access to female locker rooms and showers with no consequence to them and the elimination of privacy for the girls. This is very Marxist, having the Federal Government dictate such policies. Also, how does such a policy benefit a biological male's self esteem when he knows that the only reason he is successful in competition against girls is because he is a biological male with all of the physical advantages of body shape and chemistry? Perhaps, these biological males should be permitted to participate on boy's teams or on teams of like-minded individuals who are similarly biologically physically and mentally endowed. Separately, I favor legislation to make public-appointed bureaucrats personally liable for any adverse impacts that the policies they enact may have on any and all individual women and girls. Thank you! Mr. James J Singer (b)(6)

From: bmcgregor554@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Robert McGregor (b)(6)

From: ssgolex@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Sandra Geromette (b)(6)

From: pastormarkteal@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mark Teal (b)(6)

From: jjl8@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Melitta Luca (b)(6)

From: kelliarmstrong2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Parents send their children to school to learn academics, and skills that will enable them to build a successful future, for themselves. Parents do not send their children to school to be indoctrinated with any sort of belief system. They do not send them to school to be given guidance in sexual orientation, or moral principles concerning same. They do not send them to school for religious training or guidance. These things should be taught by the parents at home, and no one else. As for biological boys competing in girls sports, let us use common sense. A biological boy competing against girls is simply unfair from the standpoint of anatomy and physiology. Those who transgender from male to female, should have their own separate competition. Allowing biological boys to intrude into any area that is reserved for girls will ultimately harm, and traumatize these young girls, in ways that could follow them the rest of their lives. I what is supposed to be a free country, the government has no right to force ideologies on children, or their parents. Thank you! Kelli Armstrong (b)(6)

From: kodie@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Michael Mast (b)(6)

From: sherifbehna@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Sherif Behna None

From: sahessman@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Steve Hessman (b)(6)

From: gpeiffer@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Gregory M Peiffer (b)(6)

From: good1704@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Roy Good (b)(6)

From: jailmin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Steve Cannon (b)(6)

From: kauffmanruthann@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Ruthann Ann Kauffman (b)(6)

From: rrreichert1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Randy Reichert (b)(6)

From: erilda45@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Erilda Coleman (b)(6)

From: annelarose@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Anne LaRose (b)(6)

From: taz7173@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jackie Thomas (b)(6)

From: jimbalsamello@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jim Balsamello (b)(6)

From: rubyheinen@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Ruby Heinen (b)(6)

From: danag@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dana Glaviano (b)(6)

From: garyflorasr@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Gary Flora Sr. (b)(6)

From: ljcpiano2701@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Laurie Cole (b)(6)

From: sea-sun2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Murray Carney (b)(6)

From: rlewis@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robert Young (b)(6)

From: antnytoo@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. No government has any right to remove a parent's protection of their children. None. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Anthony Pent (b)(6)

From: darylcbarry@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Daryl Barry (b)(6)

From: vruggiero@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Vincent Ruggiero (b)(6)

From: Brynda.streff@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:06:10 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Brynda Streff (b)(6)

From: kirby987@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kathy Larsen (b)(6)

From: bearypatch@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Raymond Walker (b)(6)

From: abouquin78@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Allan Bouquin (b)(6)

From: mkhrucell@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Monica Khruccell (b)(6)

From: gloria.malta@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gloria Maltaglioti (b)(6)

From: patriciajohnson01@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Patricia Johnson (b)(6)

From: kayguy@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kay Guy (b)(6)

From: eric.blaesing@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Eric Blaesing (b)(6)

From: carolj1226@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Carol Jackson (b)(6)

From: kar7197@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Karen Roberts (b)(6)

From: David.weeber@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

David Weeber (b)(6)

From: jmp_pac@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jim Picanco (b)(6)

From: bjshoe1417@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware and that I am deeply concerned about. Please be mindful of them as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Barbara Shoemaker (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: billw@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Bill Welborn (b)(6)

From: rprybyla@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robert Prybyla [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: rempe21@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Heather Myers (b)(6)

From: kgdahlgren3@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Keith Dahlgren (b)(6)

From: Rachelspear@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Rachel Spear (b)(6)

From: l.muenks@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Shannon Muenks (b)(6)

From: sballtrojan10@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Sara Ball (b)(6)

From: Matt@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Matthew Goolsby (b)(6)

From: pstone4564@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Patsy Stone [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: susanheidbreder@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you as a concerned citizen and parent regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Government should be for the people and by the people not Tyrants pushing an agenda that a majority of Americans do not agree with. There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Parents are beginning to rise up, they are removing their children from public schools. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Public schools should not be indoctrination camps. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Susan Heidbreder (b)(6)

From: amygmartin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. IT IS ABHORRENT WHAT HAS HAPPENED TO OUR EDUCATION SYSTEM. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children OR TO THE OVERT SEXUALIZATION OCCURRING IN "HEALTH ED CLASSES" which encourage sexual promiscuity and abortion as directed by planned parenthood's ideal curriculum. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Genetic males have a biological physical advantage over biological females that cannot be altered with hormones. Just look at records in all sports for men vs women, men's records always without fail are faster-stronger etc than female records. This is discrimination against our daughters to allow this! Biological females should only compete against biological females! This not only affects the sporting competition but also impacts college scholarships etc and is totally unfair to our biological daughters. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Amy Martin, (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: patsy@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Rosemary Kraft (b)(6)

From: walnutave1234@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

C. Paul Wooderson (b)(6)

From: Servnjc@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. PLEASE DON'T ALLOW THE PROGRESS MADE IN THIS MATTER FOR MILLIONS TO BE FORGOTTEN FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF AN AGENDA THAT IS LESS THAN 1%. THAT IS NOT PROGRESS,, IT IS DIGRESSING I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Wayne Jones (b)(6)

From: abuddy906@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jamie Albright (b)(6)

From: loveourkids3@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gayle Hubbard (b)(6)

From: kvberquist@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Karl Berquist (b)(6)

From: Henry.Sandate.b6ss@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Enrique Sandate (b)(6)

From: mark@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mark Bacon (b)(6)

From: jeffrey.wood@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jeffrey J Wood (b)(6)

From: luv2paintstuff@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. BOTTOM LINE: I don't want biological males of ANY age in locker rooms with girls. I don't want biological males competing in girls' sports because that gives boys an unfair advantage. This practice is wrong on so many levels. Thank you! Karen Mora

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: kirkchristian@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kirk Christian (b)(6)

From: l.muenks@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lesley Muenks (b)(6)

From: jwdowdell@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jim Dowdell (b)(6)

From: dboldosser912@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Debra Boldosser (b)(6)

From: hokie49@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Ann Votaw (b)(6)

From: mb_co@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mark Betz (b)(6)

From: kobark@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Kenneth Barkdoll (b)(6)

From: colleenfulkerson@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Colleen Fulkerson (b)(6)

From: mcgriz587681@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gary McCarty (b)(6)

From: pennyalden@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

CDR John E Alden , USA (Ret.) (b)(6)

From: mcrearyclan@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. & Mrs. Rick McCreary (b)(6)

From: ktbarr2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Collette Barr (b)(6)

From: jamesmiller25@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. James Miller (b)(6)

From: johnr_robert@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robert Wattez (b)(6)

From: michellekivi@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Michelle Sisell (b)(6)

From: joe@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Joseph Bauer (b)(6)

From: daniels5001@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Boys are biologically bigger and stronger than girls. Allowing transgender males to compete against biological females gives the boys an extreme advantage in competition and for scholarships. Whatever happened to girls' rights? Approximately 50% of our student population, K-12 and post high school, are biological females, a far greater number of individuals impacted, being harmed by this "woke" attempt to placate the Left and protect a very much smaller number of individuals. No biological boys are being denied the opportunity to participate. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Richard Daniels (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: toddbj@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Brenda Todd (b)(6)

From: mochawk@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Morris Hawkins (b)(6)

From: secondgere@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like LGBTQ+ Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Elaine Gere (b)(6)

From: mwells2949@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Matt Wells (b)(6)

From: flandersfabulous@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Colleen Carini (b)(6)

From: scottvk1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Scott Vander Kolk (b)(6)

From: mjthore@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Marilyn Thore (b)(6)

From: matkinson24@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Melissa Atkinson (b)(6)

From: mconnley@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, My wife & I have 3 grand daughters and one grand son, and it is our hope that our grand son isn't using some new Biden loop hole to gain access to the girls' high school locker room and showers! I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. As a young man, I played high school & college football. I recall a number of the guys who were unable to compete for positions on the teams. Biologically, the young guys who were unable to compete with their own biological peer group were still much stronger than the best female athletes. For Biden to allow such people to intrude upon the best efforts of this nation's young women is not only unfair but such a new set of rules will only divide an already divided nation. And, it all contradicts what "unity" Biden promised just a few months ago. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mel Connley

(b)(6)

From: san954@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Sandy Miller (b)(6)

From: bluegil1966@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gilbert Smith (b)(6)

From: cmellenb340@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Charles Mellenbruch (b)(6)

From: infotechfellow@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Michael Duricy (b)(6)

From: aphrodyte12@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Miss Bronwen Hobbs (b)(6)

From: bev.quillin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Bev Quillin (b)(6)

From: nkmcdonnell@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Nancy and Mike McDonnell (b)(6)

From: kkpeters@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Karen Peters (b)(6)

From: wfhawk50@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. William Hawk (b)(6)

From: mlalex2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Merri Lynne Alexander (b)(6)

From: Larsong83@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gail Larson [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: dan@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dan Herbert (b)(6)

From: donna339@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Donna Downs (b)(6)

From: robruce@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robert Bruce (b)(6)

From: rockymtngrits@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Diane Schmaus (b)(6)

From: marciakwolff@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Marcia Wolff (b)(6)

From: jse032364@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. JEFFERY Ensley (b)(6)

From: mod_gungfu1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Mike Petrovich (b)(6)

From: dlkgutierrez98@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Deanna Gutierrez (b)(6)

From: Tavares_tom@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. A great majority of US citizens are vehemently opposed to allowing transgenders to compete with girls in girls' sports. It is just common sense to realize how unfair it is to force girls to go up against biologically stronger humans. You should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Please educate the kids and not indoctrinate them with false science and doctrine. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Again, common sense and fair play should be your guiding light. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. I pray every day that this country will get back on track, and I will be praying for you to make the right decision. Thank you! Mr. Tom Tavares

(b)(6)

From: jhs4@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Transgenders are people who have chemically and surgically altered their bodies. Their DNA is the same as at birth. There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Geraldine Stewart (b)(6)

From: tuerohuang@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Rosa Tuero-Huang (b)(6)

From: 420grannietoo@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ida Petty (b)(6)

From: griffpritch@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Griff Pritchard (b)(6)

From: goodplans4you@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Alice Haefke (b)(6)

From: jrmiller0224@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

John Miller (b)(6)

From: cal0728@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Miss C.A. A Lavallee (b)(6)

From: fpritchett@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Faye Pritchett (b)(6)

From: gmicksmith@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gmick Smith (b)(6)

From: pcohn@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, In regards to the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). We are writing about some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Please keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Cohn and family (b)(6)

From: oliorozco999@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Olivia Orozco (b)(6)

From: bojones@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. James Jones (b)(6)

From: bdcurnutt@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Brian Curnutt (b)(6)

From: joe.espitia@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Joseph Espitia Sr. (b)(6)

From: bweaver@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Brad Weaver (b)(6)

From: achristaggio@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Annette Christopher (b)(6)

From: onlyme700@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

DJ Kitchens (b)(6)

From: grandmabubbie@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Harriet Cook (b)(6)

From: billbeverly1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

William Beverly (b)(6)

From: eddajeane@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Edda Stewart (b)(6)

From: hylenville@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an ABUSE of POWER by the Biden administration. Education is a STATE and LOCAL matter protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has NO PLACE in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be EXTENSIVE CONSIDERATION given to PARENTAL RIGHTS. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and DO NOT Necessarily CONSENT to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a GROSS VIOLATION of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX PROTECTIONS for girls' sports are important and MUST BE HONORED based on SEX given at birth, NOT gender identity. As a mother of girls who are athletes and having been one myself, I am HIGHLY CONCERNED about abolishing Title IX protections. Doing this and basing competitions gender and how someone identifies brings with it so much confusion and SO MANY COMPLICATIONS Someone's Gender identification can change , but pure biological differences of sexes does not. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of FAIRNESS, RISK of PHYSICAL INJURY and PRIVACY. Since a person's gender identity can be fluid. It's possible for an athlete to identify as a male today and a female tomorrow. This could mean that the same person for example, could win the state cross county meet as a male one day or one year and win as a female the next. This is ludicrous and could be the end of biological females getting a fair playing field, all in the name of protecting transgender athletes. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. For the sake of our children and generations to come be SOBER MINDED about these things. Once Pandora's Box is opened, chaos ensues, it's nearly impossible regain any sense of order or sensibility. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Carolyn Hylen (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: jbird1949@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Debbie Bird (b)(6)

From: pianomusic2430@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Sandra Lanthorn (b)(6)

From: randygarlough@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Randy Garlough (b)(6)

From: gccady875@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, RE: the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Please keep the very important considerations in mind as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue should be fully evaluated. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you proceed in this matter, extensive consideration must be given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Please keep these thoughts and suggestions in your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! George Cady (b)(6)

From: hwt1948@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Harold Terrell [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: Denise.dew@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Denise Dew (b)(6)

From: dabria23@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dorothy Flaig (b)(6)

From: courtneyej@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Courtney Davenport (b)(6)

From: chacondan@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dan Chacon (b)(6)

From: carlferg@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Carl Ferguson (b)(6)

From: mcgriz587681@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gary McCarty (b)(6)

From: galahad@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Teresa Tullsen (b)(6)

From: in2horses4life@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pamela Miller (b)(6)

From: amym@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Amelia Misick [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: jkpettis@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. FOR THE LOVE OF OUR CHILDREN, PLEASE CHOOSE THE RIGHTEOUS DECISION ON BEHALF OF ALL THATS GOOD, GOD ALMIGHTY! Thank you! Kathleen Pettis (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: krisann.nething@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Reverend Gary L Nething (b)(6)

From: chief050961@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Tom Cannon (b)(6)

From: dpayne4501@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gayle Payne (b)(6)

From: laragon6200@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Norvalu Aragon (b)(6)

From: jnbjork32@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jennie Bjork (b)(6)

From: moore_build@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Bill Moore (b)(6)

From: tbuckmast@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Therese Blackwell (b)(6)

From: jamilee76@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jami Davidson (b)(6)

From: charrierv@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Vickie Charrier (b)(6)

From: bggreff@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Bonnie Greff (b)(6)

From: msbrendasue101@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms Brenda S S Wolfe (b)(6)

From: jknap1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Patricia Knap (b)(6)

From: dianebakerk2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Diane Baker (b)(6)

From: kyles3362@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Kyle Sanders (b)(6)

From: swamp6429@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pastor John Randall (b)(6)

From: am.marc43@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Amaris Ray (b)(6)

From: robyn.e.ireland@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robyn Ireland (b)(6)

From: kenzi87@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Mackenzi Eller (b)(6)

From: royplatz@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Roy Platz (b)(6)

From: wesmarkiv@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Marilyn Kivett (b)(6)

From: riddledeirdre@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Deirdre Riddle (b)(6)

From: Tleemurphy777@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Maria Murphy (b)(6)

From: lbeckmon@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Gayle Beckmon (b)(6)

From: kenraney@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Ken Raney (b)(6)

From: jjlafleur2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jeffrey Lafleur (b)(6)

From: robbipl@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Paul Robbins (b)(6)

From: jtsandman56@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

John Sanders (b)(6)

From: rdn9589@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Richard Nelson (b)(6)

From: coachdp7@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, As a parent, an educator and coach for 30 years, I am greatly saddened by the consideration of removing or altering the Title IX protections for women/girls and the protection for female sports and athletes. Please let biological women compete against biological women. Individuals who wish to change, or choose a different gender, or identity, compete against those with the same transgender or identity. Create new categories for those individuals instead of eliminating a fair playing field for biological women/girls. I have watched a transgender male compete in a female wrestling competition. The ache and utter defeat by the biological females will never be removed from my memory. Biological females that had worked their entire high school careers to achieve a State Championship had it stolen from them by an individual who should have been competing against other males, not females. The difference in muscle mass and strength was very apparent. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Thank you! Mrs. Dana Parnell

(b)(6)

From: RHHORN@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Roger Hornaday (b)(6)

From: burlie@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs and objective medical findings dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Young women should not be penalized based on the arbitrary feelings of a young man who "identifies" as a girl. Biology and science should determine eligibility to compete, not "feelings". I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Burlie Brunson, PhD (b)(6)

From: snowyangeli046@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Anna Chapman (b)(6)

From: bpholloways@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation goes against the constitution. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without parent consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Title IX protections for girls' sports never intended that boys who couldn't dominate their own sport be allowed to dominate girls and women's sports. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Billy Holloway (b)(6)

From: pl_72032@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Peggy Lutz (b)(6)

From: raymlr3@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Raymond Miller (b)(6)

From: joe@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is tampering with the rights of all women an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Joseph Reese

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: inthetreeoflife52@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sylvia Magee (b)(6)

From: Zionheritagefarm@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Scott Young (b)(6)

From: susan.findley@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Susan Findley (b)(6)

From: sharr890@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sharon Vosburgh (b)(6)

From: husseyarnp@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, The issue of the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX) must be scrutinized and evaluated in depth and with great understanding. As you evaluate and conduct your review of the Title IX regulations, the following is of the utmost importance in your final consideration and determination. First, you should evaluate the legal ability to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there must be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary advocates/arbiters for their children's education; they send their children to school to be educated and or ived opportunity to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. To do so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate, or as they see fit. In addition, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. These concerns not only hurt these women and girls physically but emotionally and mentally in the short term and long term as well. It is my hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Judy Hussey, PMH-NP, APRN [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: me44@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Maryellen Kanary (b)(6)

From: juliafantoni@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Julia Fantoni (b)(6)

From: katcallentine@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Katherine Callentine (b)(6)

From: raprins19@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robert Prince (b)(6)

From: mariasacco13@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Maria Sacco (b)(6)

From: marjohn310@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. FIRST, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. ADDITIONALLY, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. When I was young there were no sports available for girls in the school, or even the park district. Thankfully, now there finally is, but it is being taken away due to biological men identifying as a women competing against the biological woman. This is so unfair! I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Marjorie L Kelly (b)(6)

From: jmlinhard@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Marilyn Linhard (b)(6)

From: mouchs@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Denise Mouch { (b)(6) }

From: brynda@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. David Filkins (b)(6)

From: robertfischer@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Robert Fischer (b)(6)

From: mskayray@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Michelle Potter [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: tmac79mgb@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Terri McClaskey (b)(6)

From: athling@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Edwin McKinney (b)(6)

From: klgrube@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I'm writing you today about the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information to improve enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are a number of things I want you to consider as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has absolutely no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there should be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like the LGBTQ agenda being forced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Karen Grube (b)(6)

From: ecarvela1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Estelle Carvelas (b)(6)

From: bc979@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Doug Hardie (b)(6)

From: kjcropp162@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you, as a grandparent who is concerned about the future of public education in our country as it pertains to the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). We feel there are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Public School Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics definitely has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. As parents of three children who went through public education we feel that parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without parents or knowledge consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. I am of the age that I remember the fight for girls sports and support of their programs. We were so thankful our girls had a chance to participate in a variety of activities where they just competed with other girls. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. At some point someone needs to think these things through and not feel forced to do something that goes against all that people have believed and stood for much longer than any of us have even been alive. Thank you! Mr. & Mrs James W Cropp (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: klob4him@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Kevin Klob (b)(6)

From: andykliene@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Andy Kliene (b)(6)

From: bryan_revor@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Bryan Revor (b)(6)

From: Cristiniqap@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Cristina Puraci (b)(6)

From: Deancmw@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Carol Dean (b)(6)

From: drwolinsky@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Arthur Wolinsky (b)(6)

From: myron.effing@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Myron Effing (b)(6)

From: Twylie@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Torrey Wylie (b)(6)

From: cgwachter37@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Thomas Wachter (b)(6)

From: skthoreson@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sandra Thoreson (b)(6)

From: kernspoon@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Karen Settle (b)(6)

From: psm6417@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Paul McBride (b)(6)

From: rachel.ava.hayes@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Rachel Hayes (b)(6)

From: arnolbg1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Brenda Arnold (b)(6)

From: christinelevine@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Christine Levine (b)(6)

From: rickfancher@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Rick Fancher (b)(6)

From: dlkyper@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Daniel Kyper (b)(6)

From: millerec9858@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Elizabeth Miller (b)(6)

From: iggz@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Sandra Joyner (b)(6)

From: PTLPTA@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Laura Tanner (b)(6)

From: vchab39@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Virginia Chabolla (b)(6)

From: desendentzuse11@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Its time to teach real history that is real. Time to teach real math..Not time to teach hate against this country, and hard working people.. The schools and the liberal teachers are teaching HATE,,..... Thank you! David Robinson [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: osborn_d@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mrs. Susan Osborn

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: ljfarmer@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Jackie Farmer (b)(6)

From: mrthibs57@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Mark Thibodeaux (b)(6)

From: donboothe@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Don Boothe (b)(6)

From: johnricke@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

John Ricke (b)(6)

From: davidwmcgehee@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. David McGehee (b)(6)

From: ccc.drhodus@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Debra Rhodus (b)(6)

From: email4shelley@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rule making by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Whatever gender the person is born into, is the gender the individual should compete with on a team. There are many differences between the two genders and changing the private parts on a person, does not change this fact. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! S. Barnes

From: pjdann@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Patricia Dann (b)(6)

From: mary9464@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mary Chapman Deas [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: bruesand@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Mark Stella (b)(6)

From: Hannahborsheim@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Hannah Borsheim (b)(6)

From: reginadial@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Regina Dial (b)(6)

From: bej@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Bryan Johnson (b)(6)

From: phelwig3@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Philip Helwig (b)(6)

From: piccolal@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Linda Piccola (b)(6)

From: beckylange69@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Rebecca Lange (b)(6)

From: srwesthues@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: litchen49@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Linda Nielsen (b)(6)

From: driley29@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Douglas Riley (b)(6)

From: natashamazza@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Natasha Mazza (b)(6)

From: dandmfoulis@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Please act responsibly. Thank you! Mr. Durward Foulis (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: hillyjohn2000@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rule-making by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. The constitution gives the federal government certain powers like defense, but it gives states the power to make laws about the rest of issues such as education, which is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Those who question their gender need help from mental health professionals chosen by their parents before allowing medical action. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. It is outrageous to abuse truly females by requiring them to compete with usually stronger males who identify as females, just to make a minority happy. Rather, as Title IX holds, they should be able to compete with only truly female persons on a level playing field. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. John Hill

(b)(6)

From: Jcredeems@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Stephan Wimberly (b)(6)

From: uscunited1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

James Collins (b)(6)

From: rcsmith819@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Richard Smith (b)(6)

From: beplay@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Finally, speaking as a parent of a daughter, please consider the sensitive nature that all young girls have as they mature physically and mentally. Placing them in awkward and embarrassing environments can do considerable damage at a very impressionable time in their life. I urge you not to disregard their feelings and sensitivities. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Harry Beplay (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: reviiiver@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Joel Nitz (b)(6)

From: DougShively@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Doug Shively (b)(6)

From: Ang.hornberger@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. We all know that there are two sexes - male and female. How someone feels or identifies does not change the biological and scientific facts. And it shouldn't change educational policies and protections. Education policies should ensure American students learn, compete and lead in math, sciences, language, arts and technologies. This ludicrous transgender agenda, like the critically racist false history agenda and discriminatory policies that push equity over equality are barriers and distractions to an essential, factual and quality education. Poor educational priorities and policies stifle competition, innovation and success. Students have been stifled and distracted long enough. Keep the LGBTQ propaganda and policies out of schools and away from our children. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Angela Hornberger (b)(6)

From: ddaniel75@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Please consider the following as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Do not force ideologies on parents and students from the federal level, it's illegal. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that their parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. That is not the federal government's job. Title IX protections for girls' sports should be based on sex, not gender identity. That is not fair to girls and everyone knows it. Please use common sense when reviewing Title IX Thank you! Dan Daniel (b)(6)

From: bizellipr@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Curtis Bizelli (b)(6)

From: netzgomez@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Netz Gomez (b)(6)

From: aljumara@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jumara Aschettino (b)(6)

From: kimhester@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Bryant Hester (b)(6)

From: green.kelseym@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Kelsey Knox (b)(6)

From: Robin_gail@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robin Heberling (b)(6)

From: duane@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pastor Duane Sabin (b)(6)

From: merty05@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Karen Mertens (b)(6)

From: bookworm6191@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Kathryn Mohrman (b)(6)

From: john@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. John Welsh (b)(6)

From: leilandfmarley53@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Fred Marley (b)(6)

From: lisamariebyrd@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lisa Byrd (b)(6)

From: ptr5prtr@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Peter Porter (b)(6)

From: godsent467@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Pati Starr (b)(6)

From: jkirchner48@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. John Kirchner (b)(6)

From: randyasa@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Randy Asa (b)(6)

From: 2justjulie@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Julie Meyer (b)(6)

From: carlzhealth@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Carl Zegan (b)(6)

From: christina.huther2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Christina Cutrer (b)(6)

From: sdodge88@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Stephanie Way (b)(6)

From: williamburt@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation represents an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women's and girls' respective rights to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you will keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Please abide by existing Title IX protections for women's and girls' sports. Thank you!

Mr. William Burt (b)(6)

From: MitchellLowman@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mitchell Lowman (b)(6)

From: james.covey@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. James Covey (b)(6)

From: hammerin77@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Henry Donigan (b)(6)

From: louisebekins@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Louise Bekins (b)(6)

From: cynroe@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Cyndee Roessner [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: jamesjeffries@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. James Jeffries (b)(6)

From: gwentsend@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gwen Townsend (b)(6)

From: cdanek97@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Cathy Danek (b)(6)

From: weaveright@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Della Badders (b)(6)

From: shepards2012@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Abbie Wagar (b)(6)

From: lanes@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Lawrence Lane (b)(6)

From: brsexton73@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Brandon Sexton (b)(6)

From: rusmith59@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Russell Smith (b)(6)

From: fayesfun@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ella Stoner (b)(6)

From: carnco@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Daniel Carnahan (b)(6)

From: bjhunter747@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Betty Hunter (b)(6)

From: bill.benca@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

William Benca (b)(6)

From: ginaw@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:55:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Gina Wenger (b)(6)

From: jeffswartz@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Reverend Jeff Swartz (b)(6)

From: e.c.kuentzler2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Elwood Kuentzler (b)(6)

From: bandrews.bha@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Bruce Andrews (b)(6)

From: rnlol@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am very concerned about protecting my rights as a parent, so that I, in tern, can protect my female and male children!!! I'm asking the US Dept of Education Office for Civil Rights, to keep Title IX the way it was originally written. It is important to protect girls' rights to privacy in the bathrooms, and on the athletic field. I do not want boys to have the "right" to play on girls' sports teams. As a parent I believe I should listened to when it comes to defending my children's rights. Please do not change Title IX. Thank you! Mrs. Lorraine A Neuland (b)(6)

From: readerjp@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Judith Perlman (b)(6)

From: johndray@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. John Ray Ray Jr. (b)(6)

From: jcjwilliams1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. John Williams (b)(6)

From: justinfutch2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Biology speaks for itself on most of these matters. God bless Thank you! Mr. Justin Futch (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: vandehey8@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Joseph Vande Hey None

From: bscoker@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Susan Coker (b)(6)

From: Kirtrawlings@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kirt Rawlings (b)(6)

From: renee.mcmichael@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Renee Mcmichael (b)(6)

From: Marie.conforto@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Marie Conforto (b)(6)

From: n259rd@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Donna Maurer (b)(6)

From: Conniej1414@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Constance Jackson (b)(6)

From: vondeeburton@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Vondee Burton (b)(6)

From: jdunn_1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jessica Clavadetscher (b)(6)

From: hammjack49@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jack Hamm (b)(6)

From: abenewman7010@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. It is well known in our state that local districts are losing families to alternate educational choices for these very heavy handed curriculums that do not advance our children's education in important subjects. Rather the emphasis is toward social sexual doctrines that do nothing but indoctrinate. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. We are talking about biology here. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. It is shameful to use Title IX to now gut women's athletics eliminating advances made. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Parents and grandparents are watching! Thank you! Janet Newnan (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: fhendricks27948@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Frank Hendricks (b)(6)

From: Moacevedo91@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Monica ACEVEDO [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: flynn4family@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sandra Flynn (b)(6)

From: melissakbashaw@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Melissa Bashaw (b)(6)

From: donstp@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Donna St. Peter (b)(6)

From: rayjcg@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ray Janusz (b)(6)

From: scexl-johnpol@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Please evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Federal Government. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. John Exell (b)(6)

From: mbmpiano@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mary Beth Millner (b)(6)

From: vpmitchell2012@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Victoria Mitchell (b)(6)

From: danmills@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Daniel Mills (b)(6)

From: markmarilyn5@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when immoral/ungodly ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents and/or religious leaders for guidance. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on biological sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Pastor Mark Adams (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: cherrymac26@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Thomas Breisch (b)(6)

From: mlklock@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. I beg you to PLEASE reconsider the welfare of our children, especially girls! Thank you! Mary Klock (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: ghutt@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lauren Kirsch (b)(6)

From: horse99@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Debra Hanson (b)(6)

From: deharder07@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Dave Harder (b)(6)

From: lindaarant@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Girls are girls; boys are boys. I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mrs. Linda Arant (b)(6)

From: annabanan98@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ann Salzman (b)(6)

From: ljisbell@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Leslie Isbell (b)(6)

From: temple.higdon@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Temple Higdon (b)(6)

From: revmikemagee@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Michael Magee (b)(6)

From: tcdc44903@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Diane Cunningham (b)(6)

From: dannt@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lil Zucker (b)(6)

From: amwommack@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Andrew M Wommack (b)(6)

From: sheri.fadden@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Sheryl Fadden (b)(6)

From: willard630@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Willard Spurlock (b)(6)

From: elizabethdouglas741@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Elizabeth Douglas (b)(6)

From: gkbrady1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Genie Brady (b)(6)

From: Leahbethdavis@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Leah Davis (b)(6)

From: lindsey_jane_priest@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lindsey Priest (b)(6)

From: jackson.russell.34@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jackson Russell (b)(6)

From: signalrose@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Madeleine Gavin (b)(6)

From: araid9@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Anthony Reuther (b)(6)

From: Truejoy927@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Joy Trushenski (b)(6)

From: kbrynes@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Keith Brynes (b)(6)

From: gshoff@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Gary Hoffman (b)(6)

From: Cjeanbean@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Carolyn McClellan (b)(6)

From: maynardccr18@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Donald Maynard (b)(6)

From: afgiff4d@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Adam Gifford (b)(6)

From: us_sanders@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sam Sanders (b)(6)

From: BenPianoPro@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Benjamin Sanchez (b)(6)

From: juanitareed@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Juanita Reed (b)(6)

From: frickey70121@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Laurie Hendrickson (b)(6)

From: gohikingwithpatti@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am a practicing pediatrician in Lafayette, California. I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. As a pediatrician I see athletes every day in my office. They express to me their concerns of the opposite biological sex competing against them. It would be a threat in their continuing in sports. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Patricia O. Francis, MD (b)(6)

From: wardengd@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Gary D Warden (b)(6)

From: phil@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Phil Dickey (b)(6)

From: gerric917@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Geraldine Candelaria (b)(6)

From: frkenbreen@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kenneth Breen (b)(6)

From: bobh1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robert Heinlein (b)(6)

From: painterofmontana@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). As you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations please consider the following in your evaluations: By what measure does the Department of Education claim the legal ability to overrule parental rights on how their children are taught about gender identity and sexual orientation? To override the rights of a parent and the rights of a student is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Barbara Reed (b)(6)

From: Ldestes52@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Laurel Estes (b)(6)

From: 7greenmoose@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Robin Kilpatrick (b)(6)

From: cp@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

CT Pierce (b)(6)

From: smrenaud@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. You work for the parents, NOT for your whim of an agenda. Parents pay the taxes that support public schools to teach their children as they were taught--reading, writing, math and accurate history, nothing distorted or so confusing that children grow up fearful of not only others but themselves as well. This is unacceptable. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Ms. Suzanne Renaud

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: richardshipley1005@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Edna Shipley (b)(6)

From: julie.straightahead@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Julie Johnson (b)(6)

From: normagentry@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Norma Gentry (b)(6)

From: hannahsnudden@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Hannah Snudden (b)(6)

From: vocalmom2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. God, I ask that you give these men and women wisdom in making this decision and remind them that you created us, male and female, not I fell like a man or I feel like a woman. Male is male and Woman is female and no "I identify" as is going to change that. Genesis 5:2 Thank you! Sarah Stephens (b)(6)

From: selena_kirk@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Selena Kirk (b)(6)

From: glletson@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Gerald Letson (b)(6)

From: scafanind@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. David Scafani (b)(6)

From: kolbrh.rk@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. My State(Idaho) currently has in place protections against trans-men individuals competing against biological women in any kind of sports, and the people of this state will never condone this abuse of power by the U.S. Dept. of Education. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Richard Kolb

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: wandbjoy@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. William & Mrs. Beverly Joy (b)(6)

From: veteranstca@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Thomas Abts (b)(6)

From: rayleah1858@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Raymond Rounds Jr. (b)(6)

From: ncpattyt@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Patty Taylor (b)(6)

From: wmksjr@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

William Savage (b)(6)

From: lkflake@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Miss Lisa Flake (b)(6)

From: cj2boys@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Caleb Allen (b)(6)

From: rbendionne@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Raoul Dionne (b)(6)

From: livn4him@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. & Mrs. George K Cunningham (b)(6)

From: jimdouglas10@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, As a retired educator and father of two athletically involved daughters, I find the loss of parental rights and unfairness in the proposed changes extremely upsetting. I always supported equity and fairness in all girls' athletics... These changes would dissolve any kind of equal opportunity. All deserve opportunity, but on a level playing field.... Thank you! Mr. Jim Douglas (b)(6)

From: hopeintercessor@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Frankie Brown (b)(6)

From: 11danielsa@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Annette Daniels (b)(6)

From: vhleonard123@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Virginia Leonard (b)(6)

From: michellehughes@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Michelle Hughes (b)(6)

From: cblee01@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Charles Bruce Lee (b)(6)

From: jpfalc@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations and you need to keep in mind that I as a parent am in charge of my children and what they learn, not some unelected ideologue in Washington! First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Stop trying to brain wash children. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. This is our right under the first amendment's freedom of religion. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mrs. Patricia Falconite (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: peaceofheavenrottweilers@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. JeanneM Irons (b)(6)

From: shatzidog3@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sharon Robinson (b)(6)

From: llhmccaslin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Lynn McCaslin (b)(6)

From: tobywrissin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. It is time to realize that this is not China! One size does not fit all. Each child is an individual that has rights and his/her parent is responsible for them. A girl shouldn't be afraid to go into a bathroom or locker room because of what might be there. You are doing exactly what you say is wrong. You are discriminating against the majority to push your own agenda. In sports, a girl has a right to compete on an equal playing field. Take a step back and look at what you think is right and ask yourself, "if this was my child". Thank you! Toby Rissin

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: hpadkins391@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Henry Adkins (b)(6)

From: gotmove@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Lynnette Huston (b)(6)

From: cherundafox@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Cherunda Fox (b)(6)

From: oldadtx@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! David Dickson (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: sharonbuerck@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Melvin Buerck (b)(6)

From: pegnear@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Peggy Ashton (b)(6)

From: luis@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Luis Arteaga (b)(6)

From: kathemk@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kathleen Kinney (b)(6)

From: dpschro@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Doug Schroeder (b)(6)

From: albert_r_smith@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Albert Smith (b)(6)

From: cemorse@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Christopher Morse (b)(6)

From: wdwirz@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

William Wirz (b)(6)

From: john.weinreich@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr John Weinreich (b)(6)

From: jaconlin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). I am asking you to consider the following as you proceed with the review of the Title IX regulations. Education is a matter for the local district to work on. The federal government should not use the Department of Education to force its view of gender identity and sexual orientation on everyone. It is an overreach and abuse of power to push this. Schools need to teach students to be able to think critically, not indoctrinate them. Parents are the first and primary teacher of their children. It should be given that they have the right to educate their children. Schools should be assisting them in that endeavor, not undermining them. As we have seen over the past year, some teachers want to keep hidden their curriculum and discussions from the parents. This is wrong. When controversial topics come up, the schools should give support to parents, not undermine them. This includes topics such as identity. To undermine parents is wrong. In regards to Title IX, the rules should protect girls' sports based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. The science is clear that there is a physical difference between males and females that cannot be eliminated by drugs. Please keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. John Conlin (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: paula_mrgn@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Paula Morgan (b)(6)

From: jckccc@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jim Cantrell (b)(6)

From: shannoleary@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Shannon O'Leary (b)(6)

From: bonnie54watson@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Bonnie Watson (b)(6)

From: fernandesadam255@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Adam Fernandes (b)(6)

From: sandyeuler@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sandra Euler (b)(6)

From: dinodae@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

David V Bassett (b)(6)

From: kimberchica03@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Kimberley Stanley Huber (b)(6)

From: carriebelleanderson@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Carriebelle Anderson (b)(6)

From: fins0628dl@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). I want to make you aware of important considerations as you conduct your review of Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics does not belong in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, extensive consideration should be given to parental rights as they are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without parental consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on biological sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Richard Finstad

(b)(6)

From: stristal@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Stephen Tristal (b)(6)

From: jsedwards42@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jack Edwards (b)(6)

From: ewaterman1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Lisa Tobias (b)(6)

From: dave.buchinger@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

David Buchinger { (b)(6) }

From: V.ruth.lee@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Virginia Lee (b)(6)

From: ceturner16@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Claire Turner (b)(6)

From: bobandjeangibb@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jean Gibb (b)(6)

From: Memory.bush@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Memory Bush (b)(6)

From: akblakey49@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Adele Blakey (b)(6)

From: aragorn.ann.thacker@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Miss Aragorn Thacker (b)(6)

From: KsueLee@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Kim Sue Lee (b)(6)

From: tylerterrence@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Terrence Tyler (b)(6)

From: Ryoungmark@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Becky Youngmark (b)(6)

From: frazer.stephen@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Stephen Frazer (b)(6)

From: elho70770@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Michael E Hopper (b)(6)

From: Kastoneking@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kevin Stoneking (b)(6)

From: kattrekky@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, My understanding is that the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) is conducting a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Please consider these points as you conduct your review. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Kathy Childress (b)(6)

From: rgbloomfield@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Richard Bloomfield (b)(6)

From: timcbride777@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Irma McBride (b)(6)

From: lluther@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lorna Luther (b)(6)

From: bbsbbq@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Susan Sheldon (b)(6)

From: anita6705@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Anita Hanna (b)(6)

From: taylor9485@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Rhonda Taylor (b)(6)

From: whatsappfrombah@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Bruce Hemmer (b)(6)

From: grammadede@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dianna Miller (b)(6)

From: Christa.Roseberry@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Christa Roseberry (b)(6)

From: phil.meade62@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). First, despite president Carter's mistaken elevation of education to a cabinet-level position, it is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Second, there must be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; most of them send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to having them used as lab rats for left-wing causes. Ignoring their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Third, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on biological sex, not gender identity. Maleness and femaleness are not social constructs, but rooted in physical reality, something the left can't seem to get its head around. The sexes need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing on sports teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions in mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Phil L Meade

(b)(6)

From: blessedchange@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Joyce Payne (b)(6)

From: lisa195719082@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. In fact, this LGBTQ/transgenderism stuff should not be taught in school at all; especially to young children. The LGBTQ lifestyles are perverted lifestyles that are completely against the teachings of the both the Bible and Christianity! Children should be taught the Biblical view of their sexuality. Teach them that there are only two genders; male and female; and that's it. There is no such thing as a person being gender queer, intersex, or non-binary. They are either a male or a female and that's it. Teach these kids to accept who God created them to be. And that it's a sin against Him to for anybody to change their biological genders. God Himself assigned us our genders when He created us, and that we are not "born in the wrong body." In fact, most transgender people know from childhood that they were "born in the wrong body." Some of them even threaten to commit suicide, or who have already committed suicide. Then once they decide to change their genders, they are finally their "authentic self," "who they really are," and so forth. People need to accept who God created them to be. And besides, they are only hurting themselves by taking hormones, puberty blockers, having transgender-conforming surgery, and just simply mutilating their bodies. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Boys do not belong on girls' athletic teams, as well as in girls' bathrooms and locker rooms, and vice versa. This is not hatred. Nor is it bigotry, nor homophobia, or even transphobia. This is common sense and decency. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. I am not a parent myself, but if I was, there is absolutely no way that the schools are going to teach this garbage to my children. I would pull them out of public school and homeschool them by teaching them according to the doctrine and the teachings of the Catholic Church. Thank you! Miss Nan Fagan (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: brndgosnell@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Brenda Gosnell (b)(6)

From: lar29902@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Laura Richardson [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: Mm4jc@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Please don't let the voices of the few override the opinion of the majority. Biological males/females should participate in sports of their gender at birth. I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! M Starkey

(b)(6)

From: lcruzpa@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lillian Cruz (b)(6)

From: parkerdel57@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Right up front, you surely must know that the below letter is plain common sense. Our education system is not educating our children. They are indoctrinating them into mini-robots. How about we teach our kids Math, English, Spelling, Science, Civics, and History (Good and Bad). Our kids could also use life skills like financial, social and the concept of "Every person should be treated with respect and dignity", among many other things. We should STOP this nonsense of teaching Critical Race Theory, White Privilege, Sexual indoctrination of any kind, bogus History such as the 1619 project and many more too numerous to mention here. Hey, Try asking the parents what they want their children to learn.. I am appalled at what our education system has become. Let's bring it back to basics and common sense. ----- The below is in reference to the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Del Parker (b)(6)

From: betscherfive@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jackson Betscher (b)(6)

From: rnbear@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sonya Bear (b)(6)

From: eileendegaetano@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Eileen DeGaetano (b)(6)

From: Scrfam@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Don Miller (b)(6)

From: tonya72874@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Tonya Fitzgerald (b)(6)

From: szechuan01@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). This is a very controversial matter and demands that you very conscientiously weigh the issues in your review of the Title IX regulations. Gender identity and sexual orientation has no place in the public school domain. It is a private matter that should be handled within the child's family unit. It is not a matter to be dictated by the Federal Government. We, the people, are fully capable of making decisions to raise our children and advocate for them in the school setting. The Federal Government's intrusive actions may benefit some selected individuals, but they are not overall beneficial for the majority of children. Parental or other designated caregivers and child nurturers are the primary adults who should decide what their children learn academically as well as the social customs that are acceptable in a democratic society. Forcing children to be taught controversial topics in a manner that is meant to sway the child's developing convictions one way or another is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Let the children learn in the home setting what is acceptable and preserve the child's own inherent knowledge of right and wrong. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents or other caregivers for guidance so the subject can be explored and handled in a safe home setting where the child does not feel threatened if his or her inner instincts are troubled about what is being taught. Additionally, Title IX protection for girls' sports is of extreme importance and MUST be honored based on biologic sex, not on gender identity. Males and females are not created equally in terms of muscular strength, bone density, physical frame and power. To force males and females to compete as if they have the same physical attributes compromises fairness. A male who identifies as a female who wins against a female has competed on an unfair playing ground because he has an innate physical advantage. He is robbed of the joy of a legitimate "win" and the female is also robbed of a legitimate win. The two sexes MUST compete within the biologic categories into which they were born. Other issues include risk of physical injury and personal privacy. Protecting women and girls' rights to sports does not prohibit transgender athletes from competing within their biologic sex in sports and on teams, and as a plus, it allows them to experience true joy and valid satisfaction with a win or top medal in a competition. Please mull over these thoughts and opinions carefully and listen to your own conscience as to right and wrong. And bear in mind that your own personal integrity is at stake in the years to come if you vote against your conscience after considering all the issues carefully. You are given great responsibility. Use it in a way that you will not have remorse later. Thank you for considering my opinions and I wish you the best as you ponder these heavy issues. Susan Rosamond (b)(6)

From: pedilawyer@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Stephanie Anderson (b)(6)

From: frantat@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Frances Tatistcheff (b)(6)

From: janetort@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Janet Ortega-Palacios (b)(6)

From: aersar@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Scott Ridge (b)(6)

From: jjostrom@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, The education of the children of the United States is very important for the their growth and understanding of the privilege and responsibility of each citizen of this nation. It is not a time for indoctrination but rather an awareness of basic facts and knowledge. I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Reverend Jerry Ostrom

(b)(6)

From: gail.lopac@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I urge you to follow the science - DNA does not lie. If a male identifies as a female and wants to participate in female sports perhaps there should be a separate, non school sponsored, league for such individuals. It your responsibility to educate not promote deviant behavior. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!ok Mrs. Gail Lopac (b)(6)

From: cher.bliss777@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Cher Bliss (b)(6)

From: jamalmar@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Please evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Please give extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Jama Martin (b)(6)

From: kjopks20@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kenneth Jackson (b)(6)

From: lgkcpapa@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Larry Keeter , CPA (b)(6)

From: ckclan10@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Charity Kaelberer (b)(6)

From: jackanderson14@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jack Anderson (b)(6)

From: sswyant@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Samantha Wyant None

From: crdennis@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Christie Dennis (b)(6)

From: mraimundez@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Marta Raimundez (b)(6)

From: rcroix@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Robyn Croix (b)(6)

From: m2smdx@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Thank you for the opportunity to be heard on the important issue of girls' sports in public educational institutions - in fact, in all educational institutions! The issue is often unimportant until an individual in power has a loved one who is affected by such a matter. If you do not have a daughter, granddaughter, niece, or other female relative affected by this due to participation in girls' sports currently, it may happen that someone close to you will be affected in the near future. I believe that sports for girls in public schools were originally created so that girls would have a chance to participate competitively in sports without being overwhelmed by boys with generally greater strength and speed. It was natural, and a good reason, to set girls into sports competing against those of similar ability. We know that no trend, fad, or new philosophy will change the eons-old truth of the physical difference between biological boys and girls. I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. I appreciate being heard on this very important issue as I am the mother of three daughters! I pray that you understand the needs of safe and fair competition for girls involved in sports. They should not be cut out of scholarships and prizes by having to compete against individuals that are in a different gender-ability class. Sincerely, Mrs. Sandra Maddox

(b)(6)

From: ddlbenson@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Donna Benson (b)(6)

From: kencburgett@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kristina C Burgett (b)(6)

From: raycherie2532@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Raymond Bogusz (b)(6)

From: jbartelson@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Joan Bartelson (b)(6)

From: lookingahead46260@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Paul Elledge (b)(6)

From: dlholl@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Debra Holliday (b)(6)

From: marshat2014@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Marsha Tomlinson (b)(6)

From: jalenz@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Joyce Lenz (b)(6)

From: kcccrane@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Please use common sense, which seems to be disappearing. Thank you! Karen Crane (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: s.grauer@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sandy Grauer (b)(6)

From: willharrington@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

William Harrington (b)(6)

From: jredenbo@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. James Redenbo (b)(6)

From: mknopp@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Marilyn Knopp (b)(6)

From: Doshiab@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). I think that the number 1 country in the world needs to focus on being #1 in QUALITY of education! We are NOT because we are so busy filling our educational agenda with teachers and leaders whose main goal is to promote their perverted agendas rather than choosing educators based on academic prowess in their fields! For that reason, our students' education is "dumbed down" to the point that we have to appeal to India and other countries for our computer experts and our people are dumb geographically, and Jimmy Kimmel and other comedians display the ignorance of our population for profit! Students from other cultures who still keep academics #1 win all of our scholarships to institutions of "higher education"! We have become laughing stocks for our dumb decisions like putting biological males in dormitory rooms and bathrooms with female students and in competition with female students, and choosing people for the highest positions in our government based on how and with whom they choose to have sex rather than based on their qualifications to lead our country toward success against other nations! Perverts are emboldened to run for the highest and most influential offices in our country because the only qualifications that are important nowadays is how perverted one dares to be. China, Russia, and others vying for number 1 country in the world are applauding our own self-destruction and thumbing their noses at whom we choose to set forth in our highest offices in our land! There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Doshia Burton (b)(6)

From: ericjrball@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Please evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Eric Ball (b)(6)

From: prazcre8or@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Please hear me when I say that I am very concerned about the future of girl's sports. Allowing males to participate in girl's sports in the name of equality undermines all of the work that has occurred to bring legitimacy to women's sports. Women are entitled to compete against other women and should not have to overcome the allowance for men to take over their sport. Men have their own sports teams; those who identify as females but are biologically male should be made to compete with other men. I would also encourage you to consider that parents should have the final say in whether or not their minor children receive any medical treatment. To take this extremely important decision out of the hands of parents has a very strong potential to destroy the family. Parents know their children best and should be expected to respond as they see fit if and when any of their children wants to experiment with gender identity. All throughout COVID 19 we have been told by the government and scientists that we should follow the science, i.e., wear masks, practice social distancing, wash hands, etc. Why is it the government now is saying it's OK NOT to follow the science? Science shows that no matter the changes made to the physical body, the genetic structure of a person matches their gender at birth throughout their lives. A man cannot become a woman and a woman cannot become a man, genetically speaking. That is the science. Please do not make a mockery of our scientific knowledge. Everyone has the right to be treated equally - there can be no argument against that. However, we cannot abandon common sense in determining what this looks like. We cannot abrogate a person's rights because another person feels as if they are not being treated equally. Follow the science and you will find the basis of what is fair treatment in this case that you are considering. Thank you for listening. Jim Larscheid (b)(6)

From: pjweisner@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Director Goldberg, About the Dept of Ed Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing for Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Please parental rights and children in schools by maintaining the Title IX protections for women and girls' sports. Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Thank you! Mr. Peter Weisner (b)(6)

From: katie57@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Catherine Blomquist (b)(6)

From: jrkraynak@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

John Kraynak (b)(6)

From: ncberg55@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). I am extremely concerned about the proposed 'enforcement' of Title IX especially in areas dealing with girls sports and dictating sexual orientation/gender identity. First of all, I believe education is a state and local issue and any rules regarding gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the administration. Politics should not dictate K-12 education procedures, especially when federal ideologies are forced on parents and student. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Title IX provided for girls to have equal opportunities for girls to participate in athletics. This has proven to provide opportunities for scholarships and has increased female leadership & team work training. This access to sports must be protected based on sex not gender identity if it is to continue to provide girls with the opportunities to participate on a level playing field. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Nancy Bergman (b)(6)

From: akjungers@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Ann Jungers (b)(6)

From: sbs7nana@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Sharron Stevens (b)(6)

From: Lkcompo@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Lisa Compo (b)(6)

From: steljes@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you about the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Here are some considerations I hope you will be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, please evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rule making by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you proceed, please give consideration to parental rights. Parents are primarily responsible for their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mrs. Alice Steljes (b)(6)

From: cheekjabc@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. This is a pre written statement which I decided to send almost as is because I could not say it any better. Except to add schools need to educate not indoctrinate. My experience is that Federal mandates do more to impede the educational process through burdensome requirements that always create more obstacles to learning as local facilities attempt to implement them. Also I completely, as do MANY Americans, believe the following quote: "Girls deserve to compete on a level playing field. Forcing them to compete against boys isn't fair, shatters their dreams, and destroys their athletic opportunities," said Holcomb. "Having separate boys' and girls' sports has always been based on biological differences, not what people believe about their gender, because those differences matter for fair competition. And forcing girls to be spectators in their own sports is completely at odds with Title IX, a federal law designed to create equal opportunities for women in education and athletics. Connecticut's policy violates that law and reverses nearly 50 years of advances for women." I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Beth Cheek

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: robert_solum@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robert Solum (b)(6)

From: airborne7382@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, As the Grandfather of two young ladies who are also athletes, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). I encourage you in the conduct of your review of the Title IX regulations, to consider the following: First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Kirk Smith (b)(6)

From: fromfrc@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Daniel Jacobson (b)(6)

From: the.giboney5@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. David Giboney (b)(6)

From: waynemackert@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Wayne Mackert (b)(6)

From: macoyle2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Marilyn Coyle (b)(6)

From: Breeves517@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Brenda Reeves (b)(6)

From: tlaw495755@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Terrence Law (b)(6)

From: camillejt@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Miss Camille J Taylor (b)(6)

From: jdpdp1966@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Don Patrick (b)(6)

From: dianelemon@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Diane LeMon (b)(6)

From: galoriam@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gloria Costanza (b)(6)

From: tina.scribante@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Tina Scribante (b)(6)

From: Dougtllc@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Douglas Thompson (b)(6)

From: triciaedwards2016@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Tricia McCaughey (b)(6)

From: asnoland@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Alecia Noland (b)(6)

From: andrze1112@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Larry Andrzejewski (b)(6)

From: sclawson@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Shanon Claussen (b)(6)

From: stevep@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Steven Pennington (b)(6)

From: Tkcampbellrd@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Tanya Campbell (b)(6)

From: jpstack7@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Do the right thing! Thank you! Mr. James Stack (b)(6)

From: cindy_h65@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Cynthia Haller (b)(6)

From: kencburgett@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Kenneth Burgett (b)(6)

From: cutsright@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Sir: You have no doubt received many pretexted messages. I support every word in them. Please support Title IX as it was originally intended. Frankly, I believe all necessary laws were in place before Title IX was signed. Who knew the world would become so bizarre such that Title IX itself would need appropriate revisiting. I support parents' right to raise their children as they see fit, children's rights to be protected, and basic common sense. Thank you! Mrs. Nancy Marinelli None

From: valeriehair@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Valerie Hair (b)(6)

From: PHMYERS@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Paul Myers (b)(6)

From: mcayla@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Michaela Oosterhouse (b)(6)

From: mmathia7@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Michelle Mathia (b)(6)

From: gsstealey301@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Gary Stealey (b)(6)

From: cindyklein2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Cindy Klein (b)(6)

From: robert.whitlock2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, YOU MUST EVALUATE WHAT LEGAL LIABILITY YOU HAVE to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. POLITICS HAS NO PLACE IN K-12 EDUCATION, ESPECIALLY WHEN IDEOLOGIES ARE FORCED ON PARENTS AND STUDENTS from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. PARENTS ARE THE PRIMARY ARBITERS OF THEIR CHILDREN'S EDUCATION; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory BEING TAUGHT TO OR PRACTICED ON THEIR CHILDREN. DOING SO WITHOUT THEIR CONSENT IS A VIOLATION of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, NOT "GENDER IDENTITY". Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. To be fair, please keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mrs. Pamela R Whitlock

(b)(6)

From: wjella@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Nella Watson (b)(6)

From: bloomtree.gary@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Amy Blobaum (b)(6)

From: stephaniedrago16@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Stephanie J Drago (b)(6)

From: vaughn.reliance@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am strongly opposed to some of the actions that are being proposed by then Biden administration Any rulemaking by the Federal Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Vaughn Wilson (b)(6)

From: casej@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. This is very important! Thank you! Dr. John H Case (b)(6)

From: williams5rus@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Chris Williams (b)(6)

From: uncled036@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Darwin Boyer (b)(6)

From: stuandgus@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Stuart Blackshear (b)(6)

From: ddmwagner@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Diane Wagner (b)(6)

From: lctopham@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lyle Topham (b)(6)

From: anderson.christy@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, RE: EQUAL PROTECTION IN GIRLS' & WOMENS' SPORTS RE: Policies that violate basic physical science of male and female biology are RELIGIOUS and HAVE NO BUSINESS IN SCHOOLS & SPORTS I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal authority you have and DO NOT HAVE to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation IS AN ABUSE OF POWER by the Biden administration. Education is a PARENT RESPONSIBILITY & RIGHT that the state and local levels of government provide assistance, and parent and state rights are protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, a violation of parental rights and female protection in particular must be addressed. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; sending a child to school is not to be considered legal consent religious state run indoctrination of Queer Theory. Policies that violate basic physical science of male and female biology are RELIGIOUS and HAVE NO BUSINESS IN SCHOOLS. RELIGIOUS POLICIES of this nature violate public trust, parental rights, and FEMALE RIGHTS & SAFETY. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family RELIGIOUS BELIEFS dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for GIRLS' sports are important and MUST BE HONORED based on BIOLOGICAL SEX AT BIRTH, NOT RELIGIOUS "FEELINGS" gender identity that violates the RULE OF LAW, COMMON SENSE, AND PUTS GIRLS IN PHYSICAL DANGER, REMOVES THEIR RIGHTS OF EQUAL PROTECTION, and ARE BASED IN RELIGIOUS IDEOLOGIES THAT VIOLATE EMPIRICAL SCIENCE. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to EQUAL ACCESS to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Thank you! Christy Anderson (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: tmballard@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Tammy Ballard (b)(6)

From: albertalono@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Alberta Lono (b)(6)

From: ejnicholas@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Elia Nicholas (b)(6)

From: teresa.elizabeth181@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Teress Sikora (b)(6)

From: pattimiller5@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Patricia Miller (b)(6)

From: Bakobones@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Please support protection for women and girls' sports. Also, please respect parental rights in regards to curriculum in our schools. Thank you! Mrs. Vicki Rathbone (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: Russwidener@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Title IX was designed to protect women in various circumstances. The Democratic Party used to at least say they wanted to do that. I don't understand how you can completely ignore policies you helped create. Please stop this hypocrisy! Thank you! Mr. Russ Widener (b)(6)

From: john@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. John E Chipman (b)(6)

From: rdolan3@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Penelope Dolan (b)(6)

From: wdshort1942@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. William D Short (b)(6)

From: revkevseven@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, The following is a letter you may be getting from thousands of us who are plugging our names into a computer generated letter written by someone else, BUT BEFORE YOU BLOW IT OFF AS SUCH, PLEASE HEAR ME WHEN I TELL YOU THAT I HAVE FULLY READ THIS LETTER AND AM ONLY USING IT BECAUSE I CAN'T SAY IT AS WELL AS IT HAS BEEN WRITTEN BELOW. I AM ALSO TOO EMOTIONAL ABOUT THIS SUBJECT AND DON'T EVEN KNOW WHERE TO BEGIN ON HOW INSANE AND WICKED THESE ATTEMPTS ARE TO INDOCTRINATE OUR CHILDREN AGAINST PARENTAL WISHES ON THESE SUBJECTS!! SO PLEASE KEEP READING AND CONSIDER THESE WELL WRITTEN POINTS THAT REPRESENT MY VIEWS PERFECTLY... I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kevin Robinson (b)(6)

From: smileyred53@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Linda Underwood (b)(6)

From: jclucibis@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jesus Juarez (b)(6)

From: Kemiedh@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kemie Houston (b)(6)

From: Basehorbums@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Chuck Warczakoski (b)(6)

From: mary.mclaurin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mary McLaurin (b)(6)

From: allism1995@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Allisen Franck (b)(6)

From: suzeraink@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Suzanne Kasprzyk (b)(6)

From: ur2ugly@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jacalyn Jimenez (b)(6)

From: monteheide@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Monte Heide (b)(6)

From: SBHJAX@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and should be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. No where in the Bible do I find approval of ANY of the above problems that confront our children listed as being morally correct. Why teach the children so many "bad ideas?" America is seeing the results of the past harmful indoctrination exhibited in the riots, killing and burnings in the streets on a daily basis! Thank you! Betty M. Hewell

(b)(6)

From: Greg@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Greg Silker (b)(6)

From: patti@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Identity choice is different than what a person's physical body make up is at birth. Children's minds are so adventurous and curious and the body is always changing along with emotional up's and down's, that it should be the parents responsibility, to nurture the well being of their children and not the government, nor text books, that would cause confusion along life's journey, in the wonderful miracle of finding out who they where born to be. Please use Wisdom when reviewing Title IX, as the life's of generations now and to come are in the choice you are making now. Thank you!

Patricia Salas (b)(6)

From: SHELBY.KAYLOR@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Shelby Sanich (b)(6)

From: kgbee11@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Kim Brownlee (b)(6)

From: khouse@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Karen Sholar (b)(6)

From: miriamk47@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Miriam Krause (b)(6)

From: yeya7987@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Yesenia Fernandez (b)(6)

From: rtodd31975@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. I have granddaughters and grandsons that should be able to learn math, reading, science, geographt, without the politics. And certainly they should not have to play sports with the opposite sex and shower and use the restroom with them. Thank you! Joanna Todd (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: mainz05er@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kenneth (b)(6)

From: njbaskerville72@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Nancy Baskerville (b)(6)

From: suzytmore@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Suzy Moreno (b)(6)

From: freddiefpw@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you about the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather input and information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some extremely important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should consider what legal ability you have to take any measures you end up deciding to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power and an infringement on families by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal over-reach. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced down the throats of disapproving parents and students from the federal level. If you continue to move forward with this, there ought to be serious consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the ones in charge of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn the 3 R's: Reading, Writing, and Arithmetic, and do not usually consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity, which most children do not even experience, should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are extremely important and must be honored based on sex at birth, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. In a time where we are fighting human trafficking like never before, why would we want to put our girls at risk of all sorts of abuse while changing in front of a biological male in the locker room, who is sick in his mind and tempted to take actions against her against her will. Even if he does not prey on the girls, it's still very uncomfortable and robs her of her innocence. He also robs her of scholarships and competitions she would normally win against other biological females. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex at birth, which matches their chromosomes, which are not changed by surgery or hormone therapies. I sincerely hope you keep these words I've shared at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Patricia Whitcomb (b)(6)

From: mcopala@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Miranda Ching (b)(6)

From: marionbryant51@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Marion Bryant (b)(6)

From: lyankley@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Please protect our children, especially young girls, and allow parents, NOT government, to determine what is best for their children. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Lois Yankley (b)(6)

From: boobroussard@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). As you conduct your review, please take into account the following: First, politics should have no place in K-12 education. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Second, please take into consideration the rights of parents who are the primary arbiters of their children's education and should be the ones to address any concerns about gender identity. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mrs. Carol Broussard [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: msbass318@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Michael Bassi (b)(6)

From: jbnassoc@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. John Bauman (b)(6)

From: meridethriddle@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Merideth Riddle (b)(6)

From: r54632@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Christopher Camera (b)(6)

From: rnyberg@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. In order not to discriminate against females, males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! James Nyberg (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: dsifferm@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Donald Sifferman (b)(6)

From: susanjhinson@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Walter F Hinson III (b)(6)

From: JMW631@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

J. Walter (b)(6)

From: sjgermany@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Sandra Germany (b)(6)

From: Joefera4@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:44:21 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Joseph Fera (b)(6)

From: ray.sackett@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ray Sackett (b)(6)

From: schultfam@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Specific and extensive consideration must be given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education. Controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mrs. Deb Schult (b)(6)

From: gleyrer@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Glenn Leyrer (b)(6)

From: smnofziger@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are many legal considerations to contend with on this issue, not the least of which is whether the Dept. of Education is legally allowed to make policies that are best handled on a state and local level, as many pertinent educational issues are handled. Parents need to have the final say in their children's education and what they are taught. Along with with this, we need to defend the rights of women and young girls and give them the rights accrued to them over the years to compete fairly and equitably in an arena where they can prosper, feel safe and respected, and where their privacy is guarded as well. For too long young women and girls were left out of the arena of competitive sports and they are not going to lose their rights to it now, and this administration should be on that side of it. Transgender athletes should find an appropriate outlet to compete where others rights are ignored. Further, young women need to be protected in any case where their very safety can be put at risk having to compete with someone who has a large competitive edge due to their gender, strength and size. I hope you will truly consider the thoughts and opinions I have shared, and that others who express similar views will not be ignored. We will be watching, and praying, for the sake of our children. Thank you! Susan Nofziger

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: michaelthompson474@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Michael Thompson (b)(6)

From: Scoupcrank@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Steve DeCoupCrank [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: mike_kunke@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Tolerance is the virtue of a man without convictions. – G. K. Chesterton Thank you! Michael Kunke (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: NTHBLESSED@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Nancy Henrickson (b)(6)

From: jandskeith@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Sherry Keith (b)(6)

From: htw12436@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Henry Wilde (b)(6)

From: harveyd1213@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pastor Dennis Harvey (b)(6)

From: whisperinghills15@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

June Schmidt (b)(6)

From: williams5rus@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Jan Williams (b)(6)

From: richardsmith1031@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Richard Smith (b)(6)

From: ramiro@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Reverend Ramiro Pena (b)(6)

From: esjnschmidt@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. I would like to address Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Many professional female athletes (hetero and lesbian) do not approve of trans women competing with biological women. If a trans women wants to compete so badly, they can start their own separate group, just as Special Olympics and the Paralympics have. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Margaret Schmidt (b)(6)

From: jhall33@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Johnnie Hall (b)(6)

From: Alohafitnessthinkhealthy@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Colleen E Roberts-Witt (b)(6)

From: procopt@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Patrick O'Meara (b)(6)

From: kmchief@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. I was on a girls NY State championship basketball team and there's no way any of us could have competed against male players no matter what they call themselves. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Kathleen Chieffe (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: josh_hinkle@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Josh Hinkle (b)(6)

From: terrydurham@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Terry Durham (b)(6)

From: jeremygyorke@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. It is scientifically proven girls and boys are different. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Jeremy Gyorke (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: kl7en@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robert Kelly (b)(6)

From: watsonandwatson49@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Sandra Watson (b)(6)

From: golfingbuddy70@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Anne Donovan (b)(6)

From: engy99@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Robert Engelhardt (b)(6)

From: kandicehoughton@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kandice Houghton (b)(6)

From: sjsb79@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Susan Blocher (b)(6)

From: irussellocjr@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I'd like you to consider the statement below as my express thinking on the subject matter at hand. What is needed is true Accommodations with Fairness at the Highest standards! The Science is irrefutable and undeniably deafening on the biological differences of Women & Men. Performances on the Greatest of Athletic stages show a gap constituting separation of the 2 genders is fair and healthy. Competition by definition must be held by parties able to exhibit same results in a giving event, or arena giving all other factors are equal. Example WNBA plays 36 regular season games normally. NBA plays 72 games normally, twice as much! And the Playoffs are the same. Do the right! Don't destroy Women's Sport, if Transgenders would like to compete, I'm sure they can with the God-given Gender they have. I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Russell Carter Jr Jr. (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: christy0296@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). This issue has become far more complicated than when the amendments were written. Title IX enforcement today involves considering the affects upon the individuals and upon the group as a whole. If young women are not given a fair opportunity to succeed, many will not even try, this will have a devastating affect for generations to come. I hope you are able to move beyond the current rhetoric and examine the far reaching implications of your decisions. Thank you! Christy Walker (b)(6)

From: wifeofmrt@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am a parent of 8 children. I am very concerned about the politics and variant ideologies being pushed in the public school systems. Please hear me out! I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Trudy Labat (b)(6)

From: annaseptember9@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Although I believe education should stay a state and local issue, I am aware that the federal government does intervene in some policies. Please keep parental rights, front and center. Discussions of sexual issues should be the exclusive domain of families, not of schools, especially in a modern climate in which so many children have been abused at the hands of their teachers. And please, ensure that biological girls are guaranteed privacy and safety, by not forcing them to share bathroom, showers, or changing facilities with biological boys. I do think an acceptable solution for this would be to make ALL bathroom, shower, and changing facilities individual and private - as a girl, I never wanted to change clothes in front of other girls, either. Although I know that some young people would prefer to be seen as a different gender than what they are born as, the reality is that their muscle mass, hormones, and DNA do not change with this perspective. Those born boys still have a higher muscle mass and a strength and speed advantage. In a perfect world, I would like to see sports and academics completely separated from one another. But as long as we have "school sports" - we need to have sports that are separated by biological sex, in order to ensure an even playing field (pardon the pun), and to ensure that biological females have a fair chance of earning scholarships. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Anna Ioannides

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: pschanaker@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Paul Schanaker (b)(6)

From: lhsands@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. As a teacher in public school for 31 years and also a teacher in college for eight years, I know the differences The Lord built into male and female bodies - both physically and spiritually - and they must be realized and protected as Title IX does. Thank you! Lee Sands (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: gsklinger2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gary Klinger (b)(6)

From: cassiemusick@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Cassie Dering (b)(6)

From: nastassia@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Cynthia Henson (b)(6)

From: vanna1348@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Vanna Almond (b)(6)

From: larryandjudybrix@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Larry E Brixey (b)(6)

From: tmziegl@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Tom Ziegler (b)(6)

From: jackwarren47@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding these U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, this decision should be made by the parents. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Prayerfully, I would hope you will allow girls and boys to compete as God has created them male and female. We have enjoyed watching our young girls and boys play sports for over sixty years. The human body is definitely God's Awesome Creation. Thank you! Mr. Jack Warren (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: jasonsgotucovered@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jason Blair (b)(6)

From: debwhitmer@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Debra Whitmer (b)(6)

From: pagecage@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Charles Page (b)(6)

From: jrkraynak@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

John Kraynak (b)(6)

From: marem89@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mary Montana (b)(6)

From: Sueb710@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sue Blair (b)(6)

From: bishoprl@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Acting Director Goldberg, Regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX) ... Please evaluate what measures the Department of Education can legally pursue. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Ideologies should not be forced on parents and students from the federal level. Please give serious consideration to parental rights. Please remember that hard-earned Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Females should compete only against other females due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. In other words, biological males that now claim to be females should NOT be allowed to compete with biological females! I hope these thoughts and suggestions are kept in mind as the Department of Education reviews Title IX. Thank you! Randall Bishop (b)(6)

From: ter2davis@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Terry Davis (b)(6)

From: afosborne@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Adele Osborne (b)(6)

From: bhakken@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robert Hakken (b)(6)

From: steven.pederson79@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Steven Pederson (b)(6)

From: patheavenrusso@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Patricia Russo (b)(6)

From: mitchg@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am the father of two WORLD-CLASS female athletes. Both three-time US champions. Both were at the Olympic Training Center for JUDO. Both suffered back-to-back ACL operations and could not go to the Olympics. Both competed in MMA as well. Judo is considered by many to be the toughest of all Olympic sports. My girls are utterly outraged by the idea of anyone born male fighting as a female. They have trained with boys and men as the extreme majority their entire lives and only a liar or a fool will tell you there is not an EXTREME difference. A difference that operations and hormone shots do NOT remove. Please feel free to verify my comments: (gravesjudo.com) Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not imaginary identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. How anyone who thinks of themselves as pro-female could condone making girls subject to men in sports they have trained for all their lives is beyond comprehension. There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. Any rulemaking by the DoEd on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Parental rights are paramount. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Mitch Graves (b)(6)

From: lhinojosa7395@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lillian Hinojosa (b)(6)

From: Bkccroberts@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Brandon Roberts (b)(6)

From: iamtrout2000@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. David Trout (b)(6)

From: bobjudybrown4042@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Bob Brown (b)(6)

From: joanmarieruane@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

JoanMarie Land (b)(6)

From: bennett.bassette@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Bennett Bassette (b)(6)

From: edithecourter@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Edith Courter (b)(6)

From: jeanneahalvorson@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jean Halvorson (b)(6)

From: mpforbes@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Michael Forbes (b)(6)

From: d_mcole@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Darrell Cole None

From: mjflaming@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Melissa Flaming (b)(6)

From: csophia155@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sophia Cardona (b)(6)

From: frank.canovatchel@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Sincerely, Frank Canovatchel (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: Jipeko@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Penny Korth (b)(6)

From: james@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. James Miles (b)(6)

From: trullyblesd@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Amanda Roberts (b)(6)

From: zdgainey@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

DI Jenkins (b)(6)

From: mcabedfrd@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mary Autry (b)(6)

From: nparcak@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Nancy Parcak (b)(6)

From: visionconcepts@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There is a very important consideration you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. One of the main ones is that our girls should not be forced to compete against biological boys who are built better for strength and speed. I hope you keep this thought at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mrs. Vermelle Greene (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: dcoffi@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Deanna Coffin (b)(6)

From: glennandnoel@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Glenn Hendricks (b)(6)

From: RRoccoRossi@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Richard R Rossi (b)(6)

From: twc549@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Timothy Christopher (b)(6)

From: miktaysmom@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Please get your head out of your ass and leave the poor innocent children alone. Just let them be and stop pushing this LGBTQ garbage down their throat's. Thank you! Ms. Maria Vaughan (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: 123hel@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Helen Seppala (b)(6)

From: jbdaniels@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Janet Daniels (b)(6)

From: RickVasso@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Rick Vasso (b)(6)

From: Njbow1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Judy Bowles (b)(6)

From: Ronrogers1776@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Ron Rogers (b)(6)

From: Heather.bleacher@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Heather Bleacher (b)(6)

From: bafox@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Brent Fox (b)(6)

From: miss.lcdavis@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Linda Davis (b)(6)

From: Bkccroberts@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Brandon Roberts (b)(6)

From: mchugh1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. John McHugh (b)(6)

From: ronald.drent@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Ron Drent (b)(6)

From: LoraRM@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake and any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to give extensive consideration to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mrs. Lora Mattia (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: pia.connors@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX . " Even more problematic is the insistence logically stemming from the presumption from social corruption that all individual problems, no matter how rare, must be solved by cultural reconstructing, no matter how radical. Our society faces the increasing call to deconstruct its stabilizing traditions to include smaller and smaller numbers of people who do not or will not fit the categories upon which even our perceptions are based. This is not a good thing, Each person's private trouble cannot be solved by a social revolution because revolutions are destabilizing and dangerous....."Horror and terror lurk behind the walls provided so wisely by our ancestors. We tear them down at our own peril. We skate unconsciously on thin ice, with deep, cold waters below, where unimaginable monsters lurk." (Jordan Petersen, Twelve Rules to Live By) I implore you to respect the stewardship parents hand over to public schools whom they entrust with their children. Stop pushing agendas that their ethical convictions oppose. Stop jeopardizing the advancement of female rights to a level playing field of competition in order to satisfy the clamoring of a few who will not accept objective reality. Have the courage to stand for what is right! Thank you! Mrs. Pia Connors (b)(6)

From: thomcms@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Thomas Boswell (b)(6)

From: naturallyraw@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Chrysanthly Holbrook (b)(6)

From: soojlee5455426@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Soo Lee { (b)(6) }

From: scorefx6@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Betsy Skaar (b)(6)

From: pwr.prayer@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jeff Perry (b)(6)

From: Terry@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Terry Whitlow (b)(6)

From: janet.owens@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Janet Owens [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: c4_services@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pastor Judahabez Pegs Christian (b)(6)

From: servantheart@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Donald Brison (b)(6)

From: sharonejenk@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Sharon Jenkins (b)(6)

From: doreennharry34@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Doreen Horn (b)(6)

From: rvewold@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I have 9 granddaughters and 6 grandsons in school at this time. It is not in the best interest of any of them if their parents are stripped of their parental rights, especially where gender identity and sexual orientation is concerned. That is strictly a parents right, not the government. As for title IX, it was set up for girls to have an equal chance ONLY going against other girls, not boys that have been made into girls. I do not pay tax dollars so that your department can mess around with the rights of my grandchildren. I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Richard Ewoldsen (b)(6)

From: bluejean41@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Shellie Berkemeier (b)(6)

From: bfrc@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Robert Harold (b)(6)

From: melindasfabrics@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Roy Kinner (b)(6)

From: twhitfield81@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Tami Whitfield

(b)(6)

From: pelkeymckillop@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robin McKillop (b)(6)

From: rachelhuwe@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Rachel Huwe (b)(6)

From: cktrickey56@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Christine Trickey (b)(6)

From: kenw@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Ken Wold (b)(6)

From: acerichard812@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Richard Acevedo (b)(6)

From: vickydemtz@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Virginia Martinez (b)(6)

From: councilm@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Mark Council (b)(6)

From: markswhee5@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mark Sweeney (b)(6)

From: bedwardsb@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sgt. Brian Edwards (b)(6)

From: brianjsinclair@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Reverend Brian Sinclair (b)(6)

From: mfr6014@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Michael Rayner (b)(6)

From: godprovidesall@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Federal government should not be involved in K-12 education in any way. That is the responsibility of state and local government. Parents should ultimately be the decision makers as to what should be included in their children's education, especially in regard to matters of morality and sexuality. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Anita Hagstrom (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: Andrea225586@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Andrea Noller (b)(6)

From: monika.smith@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Monika Smith (b)(6)

From: jerry16h@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jerry Hartman (b)(6)

From: deb88empirestate@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Deborah Iemma [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: sergenilov@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Sergei Nilov (b)(6)

From: d.janeann@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Douglas Daughtry (b)(6)

From: bonnie6257@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Larry Miller (b)(6)

From: grannywise46@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mary Wise (b)(6)

From: kesnider712@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kendall Snider (b)(6)

From: jenrejoice@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jennie Zeitler (b)(6)

From: tsmart1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). It has taken 50 years to elevate girls' sports to have the same prominence as boys' sports programs, and the Biden administration took a major step toward obliterating that on Biden's first day in office! We now see girls with national championship potential who have spent years training being eliminated from contention by a boy who is allowed to compete against girls because "he identifies as a girl today." It is absolutely disgusting, not to mention totally unfair to the girls who are being harmed by these policies. There are some additional considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Thomas Smart (b)(6)

From: clare-john@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Clare Anderson (b)(6)

From: darrell_mendenhall@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Darrell Mendenhall (b)(6) (b)(6)

From: rwitten@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Ronald Witten (b)(6)

From: barb2entropy@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Barb Harden (b)(6)

From: Happyintn2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Mike Halk (b)(6)

From: marta.coffer@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Marta Coffer (b)(6)

From: Brookecaplin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Brooke Caplin (b)(6)

From: b.hersh1946@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

William Hersh (b)(6)

From: bbjohn2k2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

John Geiersbach (b)(6)

From: mitzgirl71@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Nancy C Kline (b)(6)

From: dianearms@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Michael Arms (b)(6)

From: michaelstevenmoore@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Michael Moore (b)(6)

From: dlattimer742@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. David Lattimer (b)(6)

From: jdjoe4020@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Joe Henderson (b)(6)

From: richard.arwood@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Please see and consider my comments below regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Richard Arwood (b)(6)

From: aestrehlow@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Anyone who claims that gender identity supersedes biological sex is a "science-denier," and their beliefs are 100% fiction. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Alex Strehlow (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: pat@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, effectively eliminating Title IX protections cannot be construed in any way as "improving enforcement". Almost as important, you should evaluate your legal authority to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden (or any other) Administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from Federal incursion. Politics has no place in PreK-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students by the federal government. Should you continue to proceed, extensive consideration must be given to parental rights. Parents are primarily responsible for their children's education; they send their children to school to learn. They do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to, or practiced on, their children in PreK-12 classrooms. Doing so without parental consent is a violation of both public trust and parental rights. "Gender identity" is an inappropriate topic to address in schools, full stop. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on biological sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex, or with other transgender athletes. Allowing biological males to compete in women's and girls' sports is physically and emotionally dangerous to school-aged girls and women; further, it will inevitably result in the reduction or outright elimination of opportunities for healthy competition as required by law in Title IX. Males and females, boys and girls, men and women are different. This is exactly why Title IX was enacted in the first place. Again, eliminating these protections is no way to "improve enforcement." Please keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Patrick Tracy (b)(6)

From: cahslh@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sandra Houser (b)(6)

From: wbthornton@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. W. Brian Thornton (b)(6)

From: kwepacala@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, As a parent of a son and daughter who played sports in their youth and teen years, I am very concerned for girls and women competing in sports against biological males. The physical makeup is different from birth and males have always had an advantage when it comes to strength. Perhaps there is a way to have a separate competition for someone not wanting to compete against their born gender identity. I understand that the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) has announced that there is a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mrs. Pamela Weaver (b)(6)

From: elaine_sc2000@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Elaine Smith (b)(6)

From: vickipaskert@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Vicki Paskert (b)(6)

From: Pmichap81@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Paul Michaletz (b)(6)

From: claudia_shelton@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Claudia Shelton (b)(6)

From: debcivan@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dorothy Callicotte (b)(6)

From: michaelspanza@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Michael Panza (b)(6)

From: atvn@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Andrea Van Nort (b)(6)

From: blockbryan@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Bryan Block (b)(6)

From: klscott313@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Ms. Kathy Scott (b)(6)

From: fgjondla@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Fred K Gjondla (b)(6)

From: dmledyard@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. D Michael Ledyard (b)(6)

From: kreeb56@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Kenneth G Reeb (b)(6)

From: canderson@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Carol Anderson (b)(6)

From: lrockwell4@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Linda Rockwell (b)(6)

From: chaplain45@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am in total agreement with the statements below! This is in regard to the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). These are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there should be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a horrible violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. After all, is it right, or even moral for the state to dictate that children be forced to compete against the opposit sex (even though they personally have selected to switch genders) when participating in the "public(s)" school's sports activities, which have been designated for specific sexes ? Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Charles Morton { (b)(6) }

From: bobkopenhagen@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Bob Koppenhaver (b)(6)

From: skyusafb52@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Abbey Nichols (b)(6)

From: Kiersa858@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Keri Knuthson (b)(6)

From: ktowngrad@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Tonia Bloss (b)(6)

From: glorybe2god61@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. John Swiniarski (b)(6)

From: ladonna.even@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Arthur D Even Jr. (b)(6)

From: annefry5@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Anne Fry (b)(6)

From: jkwaterbury@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Karen Waterbury (b)(6)

From: clarkandsandra@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sandra Bedford (b)(6)

From: Cortnie00@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Cortnie Long (b)(6)

From: babcock128@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Christina Babcock (b)(6)

From: aliciacaver@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Alicia Caver [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: mjmartin4@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mary Jo Martin (b)(6)

From: crazycat86516@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Cathy Bisiani (b)(6)

From: cmarkm9@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Government Schools are not what parents want for their children. Children and families must come first in the raising of children, not the government. Your actions will harm our basic freedoms. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Carol Markham (b)(6)

From: coopmike77@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Mike Cooper (b)(6)

From: leeandcathy2000@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robert Gilchrist (b)(6)

From: akballard059@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Angela Ballard (b)(6)

From: marcsalser@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Marc Salser (b)(6)

From: sharonbuerck@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sharon Buerck (b)(6)

From: mjmartin4@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mary Jo Martin (b)(6)

From: gshybee@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Miss Gretchen Scheibe (b)(6)

From: liberty@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Title IX is a very important law that needs your most thoughtful consideration as you prepare for the upcoming virtual public hearing. Regarding specifically the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) virtual public hearing that is scheduled to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you need to evaluate what legal ability you actually have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. ANY rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. POLITICS HAS NO PLACE in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to PARENTAL RIGHTS. Parents are THE primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and DO NOT necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports especially important and must be honored based on at birth sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Please keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Robert Gast (b)(6)

From: Babyluv777@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dawn Henderson (b)(6)

From: evelyn.argentieri@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Evelyn M M Argentieri (b)(6)

From: safety103@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Larry Hancock (b)(6)

From: rita_casey@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Rita Casey (b)(6)

From: vgomez177@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Vicente Gomez (b)(6)

From: sesharp.ss@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sarah Sharp (b)(6)

From: lastchance577@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gerald Chance (b)(6)

From: cocosolotommy@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Let these comments guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Tommy Lee (b)(6)

From: barryenesbitt@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Barry Nesbitt (b)(6)

From: happeglmr@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Courtney Gilmore (b)(6)

From: Info@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Harvey Ross (b)(6)

From: aldermanjmj@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kristen Alderman (b)(6)

From: s.vickers7@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sandy Vickers (b)(6)

From: tomsmit1390@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Have you all gone mad back there in the swamp?!! Thank you! Mr. Thomas Smith

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: billdavisroofing@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

William Davis (b)(6)

From: Shull@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sandra Hull (b)(6)

From: cara.beasley@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Cara Beasley (b)(6)

From: warrenray55@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Warren Ray (b)(6)

From: pelabt@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Gene Moore (b)(6)

From: frangipany42@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Cecilia Brooks (b)(6)

From: jpstowe66@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. John Stowe (b)(6)

From: carolyncaine@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 00:17:19 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Carolyn Caine (b)(6)

From: richperk@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Richard Perkins (b)(6)

From: dawn@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Dawn Cole (b)(6)

From: stefam2005@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Stephany Manning (b)(6)

From: idahospursgirl@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dianne Brady (b)(6)

From: tjpolkinghorne7956@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Tamara Polkinghorne (b)(6)

From: Caimorrow@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Caroline Morrow (b)(6)

From: kathy@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Even former Olympic champion Bruce/Caitlin Jenner has said this is in no way fair to girls. The sexes are different, no matter how they identify. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Kathy Waite (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: adpsydr@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, This letter is to comment on the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration!!! Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has NO place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Anne McGill (b)(6)

From: riley.gerbrandt@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). The U.S. Government must respect parental rights AND protect school children. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. The school system (and thereby the Government) appropriating the rights of parents and claiming the role of parental guardian while the children are at school thereby disallowing the right of parents to discuss these weighty matters with their children is abhorrent. There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Jesse O'Kelley (b)(6)

From: prkgcfw@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Pamela Kaminski (b)(6)

From: sandjack48@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Frank Jackson (b)(6)

From: stringfellowr2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Roy Stringfellow (b)(6)

From: billccs@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

William Coughlan (b)(6)

From: belcher.thomas2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Thomas Belcher (b)(6)

From: aszeto49@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Andrew Szeto (b)(6)

From: smitchell6709@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Scott Mitchell (b)(6)

From: rhondalk@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Rhonda Molvik (b)(6)

From: karen.rideout@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Karen Rideout (b)(6)

From: xmsbbf@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Melissa Millican (b)(6)

From: mjshklar@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you as a former teacher and female athlete regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). You need to be aware of Important considerations as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you decide to pursue. Any rule making by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies and behaviors are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are vital and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Mike shklar (b)(6)

From: ronaldhall@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Helen Hall (b)(6)

From: john.curran1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

SFC (R) John Curran (b)(6)

From: sgsdecker@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. susan Decker (b)(6)

From: curtandlinda@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Linda Long (b)(6)

From: emcarter51@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Edward Carter (b)(6)

From: jjpete@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I coached track and cross country for many years and it is totally unfair for biological males to compete against females. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. John E Petersen (b)(6)

From: jjskjonsby@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Joel Skjonsby (b)(6)

From: chickencluck@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Susan Lenhart (b)(6)

From: Drarlenekaiser@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Arlene Kaiser (b)(6)

From: delegold@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Adele Goldstin (b)(6)

From: writer2006@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Jean Evans (b)(6)

From: bchaney158@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Bob Chaney (b)(6)

From: johnandcarol.vare@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Carol Vare (b)(6)

From: zlbromans1513@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Zora Lynn Burkleo (b)(6)

From: paulastoverink@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Paula Stoverink (b)(6)

From: matthew.d.stroup@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Matthew Stroup (b)(6)

From: bdetamore@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. and Mrs William Detamore (b)(6)

From: xxemilyannexx94@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Emily Minch (b)(6)

From: dkwatson4@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kelly Watson (b)(6)

From: Loretta.tobler@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). STOP THIS MADNESS! There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a STATE and LOCAL matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has NO place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, NOT GENDER IDENTITY. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. May God influence your decision. Thank you! Loretta Tobler

(b)(6)

From: dcsc2129@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Susan Claflin (b)(6)

From: hinesfarm5@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mary Hines (b)(6)

From: lorak2000@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Laura Johnson (b)(6)

From: cmverwys54@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Craig Verwys (b)(6)

From: florajeanmckay@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Flora McKay (b)(6)

From: jawendell@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jerome Wendell (b)(6)

From: anndoss@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Ann Doss [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: ckaiser@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Cheryl Kaiser (b)(6)

From: catnip1947@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Cathy Hughes (b)(6)

From: b.lammert@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. I feel so very strongly about this and it is important to do what is fair and right for our children. Thank you! Barbara Lammert (b)(6)

From: darleneshue@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Darlene Shue (b)(6)

From: currierm2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mark Currier (b)(6)

From: amystielelunski@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Amy Lunski (b)(6)

From: ph46789@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Robert Sandberg (b)(6)

From: peageet@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Polly Tucker (b)(6)

From: suzannekearney@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Suzanne Kearney (b)(6)

From: Micahdevries@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Micah DeVries (b)(6)

From: sgrippe763@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Sharon Grippe (b)(6)

From: lackeyre@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Rosalyn Lackey (b)(6)

From: gerald.mersten@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gerald Mersten (b)(6)

From: lynnardh@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lynn Hill (b)(6)

From: deucher@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Robert Deucher (b)(6)

From: mclingard@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Wayne Lingard (b)(6)

From: hardwrkr@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. James Sims (b)(6)

From: ron@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. These points are common sense to many. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Ronald Desilva

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: georgehnunes1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. George H Nunes (b)(6)

From: paulambryson@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Paula Bryson (b)(6)

From: loper_ruth@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ruth Loper (b)(6)

From: geraldphyllis@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Gerald Morrison (b)(6)

From: sammy@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Samuel Nava (b)(6)

From: lisa.ward5@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lisa Ward (b)(6)

From: net2merc47@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Annette Ryder (b)(6)

From: 911md@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Marcia Peters (b)(6)

From: Lindaheifner@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Linda Heifner (b)(6)

From: roberts_cass23@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Cassandra Roberts (b)(6)

From: ndean43882@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I think transgender athletes could compete against others like them. They could have their own category, sponsors I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Nancy Dean (b)(6)

From: richard.t.cook@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Richard Cook (b)(6)

From: keithndj@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Keith Jaeger (b)(6)

From: vcasinc@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

William Ward [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: bobnlousecord@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Robert Secord (b)(6)

From: Ncegans@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Debbie Egan (b)(6)

From: darizona@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. David W Givens (b)(6)

From: barbaraksanders4@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Rex E Sanders (b)(6)

From: dcota203@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Deborah Cota (b)(6)

From: 2smiths827@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Linda Smith (b)(6)

From: ajasim852@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

James Simmons (b)(6)

From: zlbromans1513@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Zora Lynn Burkleo (b)(6)

From: jerilyn.gibbs@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jerilyn Gibbs (b)(6)

From: jmstoneb@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. If you listen to girl athletes, you will find that they also do not want biological male competition within their sport since the physical makeup is not the same. Some have lost competitions due to this difference which is unfair to the biological girl. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Jeann Stoneburner

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: michaeljurich@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U. Yes 🇺🇸 S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. Yes 🇺🇸 I just just sent a First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Michael Jurich

(b)(6)

From: marti_johnson@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Quite frankly, the Federal government needs to get out of the 'education business' and let the states and local governments reassume that responsibility. Once upon a time, the U.S. had the best educational system in the world. Since the Federal government got more involved, it's been on a downhill slide ever since and now we rank pretty close to the bottom as far as First World countries go. Thank you! Martha Johnson

(b)(6)

From: caanaya3@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Christine Anaya (b)(6)

From: dvcaron5@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Valerie Caron (b)(6)

From: vbelle43@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Victoria Bellemin (b)(6)

From: rcgartland@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Renee Gartland (b)(6)

From: sumpter.rose@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Michael Lancaster (b)(6)

From: frankm3@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Frank Moeslein (b)(6)

From: nathanmclaughlin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Nathan McLaughlin (b)(6)

From: gtweick@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I believe that Biden administration actions taken to remove the previous administration's protections for women's sports is immoral and unethical. Also, I believe that changes in definitions being promoted are in violation of the 1972 Title IX education amendments and therefore should not be made unless and until Congress passes and the President approves those changes in a new law. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. George Weick (b)(6)

From: jysasi@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Joseph Ysasi (b)(6)

From: sekc@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Susan Craig (b)(6)

From: vanessapedersen@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jared Pedersen (b)(6)

From: aneszkordh@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Danielle Aneszkó (b)(6)

From: shashii@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Leonard Hills (b)(6)

From: mackcrum@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. William Crum (b)(6)

From: Jillsturrock7@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). I am writing you as a veteran health/PE teacher and mother of three children. There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Why even have local school boards if you tell them what to decide. That is not democracy! Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I remember a time before women were given equal access in sports. You are undoing what generations of women have fought for. I'm sorry if you don't like the statistics but males in female sports decreases the amount of females that want to play. This example just played out on my daughter's soccer team. A local club is allowing a boy keeper on their team. Guess who is the only keeper in the state who hasn't been scored on? Honestly, it is maddening for the girls. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jill Sturrock (b)(6)

From: lredhage@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Louis Redhage (b)(6)

From: amendo77@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

David Amendola (b)(6)

From: malotts1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robert Malott (b)(6)

From: kandrmeek@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Randall Meek (b)(6)

From: lorna.benner@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lorna Benner (b)(6)

From: artistcindyfritz@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendment. Please give consideration to parental rights. Parents are responsible for their children's education; they send their children to school to learn reading, arithmetic, true history, testable science, etc. Political agendas, the humanistic atheistic religion, and sexual behavior are subjects that should be left to parents to decide how to deal with. Public schools teaching these without parental consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you allow these views to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mrs. Cynthia Fritz (b)(6)

From: k_c_rex@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Education is a state right. The feds should stay out of it. Local people should decide how they want to educate their children. Parents should have the full rights to determine how their kid is educated. And be allowed to protect them from what they believe to be destructive teachings. In addition, Title IX should protect girls sports and girls should never have to compete against a biological male. To prove this, why are biological males that call themselves females breaking all kinds of female sports records, yet not one biological female claiming to be a male has even come close to breaking any male records? I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Kevin Rexroad (b)(6)

From: toddrodgers@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Richard Rodgers (b)(6)

From: lorriedeu@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Lorraine F Deussen (b)(6)

From: dtompkins4@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Diane Tompkins (b)(6)

From: movnhay@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lori Van Vliet (b)(6)

From: ajscooca@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Because I am a very concerned citizen, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you for listening and acting. Annette Scoca

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: rickandjoan1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Richard Smith (b)(6)

From: yellowbus_06@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Leticia Fletcher (b)(6)

From: flyarmy101@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. CRT is not what it seems, just like the BLM movement. CRT makes black people the poor victim and white people the reason for it. That is not the truth. Every person is responsible for their actions, and what they make of themselves. In the 70's and 80's this country was on track to be better than it ever was. Heck, when President Trump was in office(if you liked him or not) he had black unemployment to the lowest it has ever been. Some of the best in their field are people that came to this country from South Africa, Iran, and other nations that oppress their people, and they made something of themselves here because they had the freedom to do so. If we teach black people from an early age that they can't do anything because of white people, then they are doomed to believe it and not try to make a positive difference. Also, if we teach 3, 4, and 5 yr old's that they don't know what sex they are, then of course they will be confused. This is not right, and will only further divide this country. But hey, that is what socialism is all about...divide and conquer. Take from everyone until there is no more, then start to kill off the ones you don't like the most first. God is the only way we have to help this country. Our founding fathers knew it, and it is still true today. It is not against any law if I hurt you feelings talking about something you don't like. You can listen, or leave, or believe whatever you want, but you can't stop me from saying anything. God is !! God is the answer to all of this. We just need to turn back to him, and He will heal our nation. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Russell Moore

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: ckshaley38@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Cynthia Haley (b)(6)

From: Jenelle.parks.3@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jenelle Parks (b)(6)

From: slboatfield@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Sandra Boatfield (b)(6)

From: maggiefaul@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Margaret Faull (b)(6)

From: 1944wmh@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

LDear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

William Hamilton (b)(6)

From: barblane60@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Barbara Babcock (b)(6)

From: unthistmajor12@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Keith (b)(6)

From: zmchgan@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. William Zenoniani (b)(6)

From: bcubed@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. David Buntin (b)(6)

From: kathleenkansky@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I pray that you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Ms. Kathleen Kansky (b)(6)

From: rhjaeger59@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ron Jaeger (b)(6)

From: billwalker0950@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

William Walker (b)(6)

From: hallofsoccer@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Patricia Hall (b)(6)

From: wmcclen@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Wanda McClendon (b)(6)

From: buffingtonfamily3@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs.Barbara Christine B Montes (b)(6)

From: rickwhistler123@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Rick Whistler (b)(6)

From: weichstadt@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some considerations that I believe are very important to your review of the Title IX regulations. First, education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. There should be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Pastor Wayne Eichstadt (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: janetsweeting@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Janet Sweeting (b)(6)

From: wfk4500@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

William Kavanagh (b)(6)

From: kmn029@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Keisha Newman (b)(6)

From: carolnray99@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Carol Ellestad (b)(6)

From: vaishali.manuel@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Vaishali Manuel (b)(6)

From: joe3034@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I no longer support Public School Education in America. Why ??? It is no longer interested in educating our children . Public Schools have pushed left wing Demonrat propaganda to our children !!! It is brain washing our children rather than educating them. It is time to defund Public Schools and eliminate them since they are the enemy of our country and our Constitution. Americans should no longer be forced to support an institution that is pushing propaganda and brain washing our children. We can thank the damn Demonrats for politicizing our Public Schools !!! Americans should no longer support a crooked and corrupt institution !!! Thank you! Joseph Anthony (b)(6)

From: mccoynyna@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kyna McCoy (b)(6)

From: adeeperwalk@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rule making by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Also you need to be prepared to meet God at the Pearly Gates and explain to Him how you spit on his creation. Male and Female He created them. I dare you to find two men who can produce a baby or even two women. You have to have one male and one female because that's the way God created them. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on reproductive abilities, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports should not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams with a new category called "Trans" to align with their identified sex. I hope you know that you will face GOD with the guidelines you are trying to impose on normal society, so keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX, or spend eternity in HELL, Thank you! Carol H Perry (b)(6)

From: dwchilson7@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you as a parent and grandparent as well as a former teacher, regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). I believe the following considerations are very important and ask you to be aware of them as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Darrell Chilson (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: Regnsues@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Susan Regnier (b)(6)

From: davewmsuplandin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. David Williams (b)(6)

From: trhurt@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Roberta Hurt (b)(6)

From: debbie.goings@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Debra C Goings (b)(6)

From: Cherie@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Cherie Fisher (b)(6)

From: ramona.miller@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Please hear us, parents, as we implore you to return Education to learning, rather than to social experimenting. In that hope, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations of, which, you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, please evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rule making by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level; and, particularly when these policies are implemented without our (parents') approval and often without our knowledge. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not usually consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females are physically different, regardless of "transgender" procedures! Therefore, they need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mrs. Ramona Miller (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: ckippenhan6@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

colleen Kippenhan (b)(6)

From: ourhallmail@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, As a former student athlete (Elementary, Middle, + High School as well as college) I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). I am passionately concerned about some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what LEGAL ABILITY you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rule-making by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is a blatant abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. SHAME on allowing politics in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there MUST be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters and protectors of their children's education; they send their children to school to LEARN TRUTH and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public TRUST and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as THEIR family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to the VERY SERIOUS issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I urge you keep these suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mrs. David Hall

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: panderson@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I'm sure you are receiving a lot of emails regarding this, so that you for taking the time to read this. I'm not certain how the world got so crazy so fast, but it has and something needs to be said regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Paul Anderson (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: swavelyf@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Frederick Swavely (b)(6)

From: nenasings4god@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Maria Amaral (b)(6)

From: Delbartonmom2008@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Lisa D'Alia (b)(6)

From: jkhuerth@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Joan Huerth (b)(6)

From: cindy@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Cindy Cooper (b)(6)

From: sreccles@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Stephen Eccles (b)(6)

From: jrajoyster@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Amy Oyster (b)(6)

From: bradsloan@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration and those who desire to destroy this Republic. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. This legislation is an affront to the Founders, every brave soldier, sailor and airman that died to ensure the Constitution would be defended. I leave you with this thought: one day you will stand before Almighty God and have to give an account for the decision you make. It is my prayer that you choose wisely and remember that God's justice is sure and His discipline severe. Thank you! Rev. Brad Sloan (b)(6)

From: jaro.home@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Paul Jarosinski (b)(6)

From: deaconrandallg@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Randy Smith (b)(6)

From: Yvaine4@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robyn Fuller (b)(6)

From: houmurd@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Stephen J. Murdoch (b)(6)

From: oprosevear@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Reverend Robert Rosevear (b)(6)

From: dongwoo17@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pastor Dong Woo Kim (b)(6)

From: jblanco2k3@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Joann Blanco (b)(6)

From: larryrm6@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Larry Mcclimans (b)(6)

From: angi2769@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Angie Carline (b)(6)

From: ks19472000@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kyle Snyder [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: Michelle.r.allison@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Michelle Barnes (b)(6)

From: elvive80@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, As an Educator myself, this is very concerning to me! I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Christine Horn

(b)(6)

From: jeff.mackintosh@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jeffrey Mackintosh (b)(6)

From: cheryl123roberts@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Miss Cheryl Roberts (b)(6)

From: rkc8@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Seriously, HOW is this something that is even up for debate. Talk about not being able to see the forest for the trees! I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mrs. Kathy Cook (b)(6)

From: Brad@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Roger Delaughter (b)(6)

From: tesaunders0928@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Tracy Saunders (b)(6)

From: dhoule76@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Common sense, something of an endangered species in Washington these days, needs to be revived and pursued again in matters of public policy. Political correctness is destroying what America's greatness used to be. It needs to be laid to rest. Thank you! Mr. David Houle

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: Mightycuen@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Nancy Cuen { (b)(6) }

From: danniemarlene@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dannie Machemehl (b)(6)

From: pony_girl86@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Noel Favorite (b)(6)

From: trinajoebeasley@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Trina Beasley (b)(6)

From: igp20225@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ilene Phillips (b)(6)

From: ginalvsjc@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Gina Stoner (b)(6)

From: findkathy@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kathy McGarry (b)(6)

From: smclawmd@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Samuel Clawser III (b)(6)

From: rscottmoody@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ronald Moody (b)(6)

From: Deborino@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Deborah Lock (b)(6)

From: maria10cj@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Maria Mahler (b)(6)

From: tia.maragos@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Tia Maragos (b)(6)

From: awrasman@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Aaron Wrasman (b)(6)

From: evrmore12@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Clarence Williamson None

From: jrhosey@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jimmy Hosey (b)(6)

From: bin1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Lawrence Le Lievre (b)(6)

From: dmbuys@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Douglas R Buys (b)(6)

From: red4lisa@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I'm asking that you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you for your consideration! Ms. Lisa Collinsworth

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: rlm42@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Roger Metcalf [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: sainz4@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Carolyn Sainz (b)(6)

From: davelonsway@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. David Lonsway (b)(6)

From: garym@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gary (b)(6)

From: laarzw@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. William Laarz (b)(6)

From: tonyagarcia02@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Tonya Garcia (b)(6)

From: mary.patzer@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mary Patzer (b)(6)

From: kweissc@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Kerri Weiss (b)(6)

From: floglo41@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gloria Gallogly (b)(6)

From: astrohm40@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Angela Strohm [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: fdpiano@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Fred Dicesare (b)(6)

From: jdg@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations I would like you to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rule-making by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on biological sex, not gender identity. Biological males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting biological women's and girls' rights to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. John D Goodwin

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: rosskennethb@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Kenny Ross (b)(6)

From: derickmidcap@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. David Midcap (b)(6)

From: evergreenjj@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jerry Johnson (b)(6)

From: karenmerritt@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Karen M Merritt (b)(6)

From: Venkat@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Sir, I service the K12 industry and someone coming from India, its best the education system focuses on giving knowledge and learning opportunities in academic subjects to better serve them and leave the life decisions to their parents. I am sure if you are parent you would want to make the right decisions for your children not schools, districts, definitely not federal government. Thank you!

Venkat Varada (b)(6)

From: marku@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Mark Urbanek (b)(6)

From: hudakcj@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Craig Hudak (b)(6)

From: clint.shondelmyer@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Clint Shondelmyer (b)(6)

From: dumpsterfire24@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Steve Jones (b)(6)

From: Pat6606@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Pat Dolphus (b)(6)

From: dogfriend12@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Miss Laurel Ahlenius (b)(6)

From: Cowboyroy@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Roy Stanton (b)(6)

From: Rachel.I.tilley@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Rachel Tilley (b)(6)

From: dspitz918@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dana Spitz { (b)(6) }

From: zookeeper@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Dean Proffer (b)(6)

From: gwalcker@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ginger Walcker (b)(6)

From: sgrover@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Susan Grover (b)(6)

From: ratsat732@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on birth sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Susan Atkins (b)(6)

From: markn70714@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mark Novak (b)(6)

From: diamond.rhino@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Charles Davidson (b)(6)

From: pass.llc.va@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Juanita Coffelt (b)(6)

From: Ellenblee12@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs Ellen Lee (b)(6)

From: powderiver1876@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Allen Edmonds [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: jared.barger@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jared Barger (b)(6)

From: kenandcarolriley@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Carol Riley (b)(6)

From: mbhageman@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Marybeth W Hageman (b)(6)

From: hightider7122@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr Gary Watson (b)(6)

From: amccalli@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Amber McCallister (b)(6)

From: dldmm@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Linda Parks (b)(6)

From: tyrrellfamily@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Patti Tyrrell (b)(6)

From: voralgratha@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Matthew Forish (b)(6)

From: dhwalls@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Donna Walls (b)(6)

From: james_amico@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Actions under consideration by this Administration and this body are, quite frankly, beyond the pale and wholly unconscionable in my opinion, no doubt shared by countless -- many tens of millions at least - of other Americans that you are obliged to consider in your rule making. An extreme agenda can only raise the ire of common sense minded parents and other Americans who will do whatever they can to reverse it and quash such objectives forever. Thus tread carefully -- an extreme agenda that is out of touch with ordinary Americans will prove counterproductive. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. James Amico

(b)(6)

From: vroeske@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Victor W Roeske (b)(6)

From: orv131@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Orvell Kemp Sr. (b)(6)

From: debbie.marie.martin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Debbie Martin (b)(6)

From: economyhonda@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Betty Murphy (b)(6)

From: ronitom@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Roni Furlough (b)(6)

From: marylynn2862@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mary Drexler (b)(6)

From: clarkertc@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Randy Clarke (b)(6)

From: coachbobgordon@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Bob Gordon (b)(6)

From: sjgunnink@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. I cannot emphasize this enough: Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. PARENTS are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a VIOLATION of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, NOT gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mrs. Shauna Gunnink (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: dbrady1947@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

David Brady (b)(6)

From: Cmarcetti@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Cathy Marcetti (b)(6)

From: jgstevens@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jan Stevens (b)(6)

From: stephanierose1636@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Miss Stephanie Rose Wallace (b)(6)

From: sarah@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Sarah Hayes (b)(6)

From: blessedboyds@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Only a great fool would have boys competing with girls in sports. I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Garrett Boyd (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: april.cou@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

April Coulson (b)(6)

From: niner_70@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jeanine Gerbec (b)(6)

From: tstory@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Terry Story (b)(6)

From: mkantonen@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Mavis Kantonen (b)(6)

From: sstromberg88@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Shawn and Sandra Stromberg (b)(6)

From: tmm373@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Timothy M Myers (b)(6)

From: j.christensen4031@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jennifer Christensen (b)(6)

From: clairegaul61@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Claire Gaul (b)(6)

From: kdianefred@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). The Title IX protections are very important to me and my wife as grandparents. We strongly believe that biological boys should not be competing in girls' sports. There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Frederick Krause (b)(6)

From: taylornelson616@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Taylor Nelson (b)(6)

From: tclapper77@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Timothy Clapper (b)(6)

From: jganzer@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

John Ganzer (b)(6)

From: craigcope15@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Craig Cope (b)(6)

From: florajeanmckay@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Flora McKay (b)(6)

From: ilbcnu6@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gene Bommer (b)(6)

From: lsolti7922@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Linda Solti (b)(6)

From: inhiscares5@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Claudia Bland (b)(6)

From: sandybanks48@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Sandy Banks (b)(6)

From: trefz123@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Scott Trefz (b)(6)

From: lburm@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Linda E Burmeister (b)(6)

From: yallady0314.az@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Brenda Scott (b)(6)

From: rich.emc2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. It is imperative to keep biological males out of women's sports. The physical advantages of the male anatomy guarantees girls and women won't have a fair competitive edge and will ruin the ability of women to be able to beat records that have been unfairly skewed in favor of males who identify as female. Women's sports will be ruined and their ability to compete with each other for scholarships and awards be taken away from them. No matter what you think you identify as doesn't change the physical reality of one's anatomy. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Richard Crawford (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: clara@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Clara Esser (b)(6)

From: dirkrhy1953@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Dirk Rhynsburger (b)(6)

From: replogle.kayla@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kayla Replogle (b)(6)

From: tvalum75@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Marylee Hardbarger (b)(6)

From: romavon@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Mary Vaughan (b)(6)

From: prsbinhisgrace@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pamela Bare

(b)(6)

From: cbbregoli@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rule-making by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Biological Males and Biological females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Charlene Bregoli (b)(6)

From: rtway@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robert Tway (b)(6)

From: grandanderson15@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Maria Anderson (b)(6)

From: leslie@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Leslie Stanton (b)(6)

From: marytrax@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Mary Traxler (b)(6)

From: maryannewilliams2400@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Maryanne Williams (b)(6)

From: jrousseau861932@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Judith Rousseau (b)(6)

From: sku54@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Sherri Urban (b)(6)

From: randyclark4473@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Randy Clark [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: kathy@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kathy Bray (b)(6)

From: sadie2725@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Timothy Cox (b)(6)

From: maspickler@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mary Spickler (b)(6)

From: ket10243@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ken Taylor (b)(6)

From: jwalker.jm80@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Jackie Monday (b)(6)

From: lindajoreed@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Linda Jo Reed (b)(6)

From: stanlaz@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Stanley Lazarczyk (b)(6)

From: cbinger292@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Cynthia Binger (b)(6)

From: Marilyn1072006@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Marilyn Fraser (b)(6)

From: Sarahsivilay@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sarah Sivilay (b)(6)

From: aprilboyer323@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

April Boyer (b)(6)

From: johnkendall05@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. John Kendall [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: mbchambers@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Otherwise, you are replacing the parents of this country, replacing their role in the raising of their children. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. There IS a biological difference between males and females. That's just the facts of life. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Biology does not lie. Men are men, and women are women. Please keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. We parents have a right to guide our children and not have the federal government interfere when we only have our children's best interests at heart. Thank you! Mr. and Mrs. Richard Chambers (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: tonidreed4@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Toni Reed (b)(6)

From: thompsona4169@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Angela Thompson (b)(6)

From: beckybugenhagen@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Rebecca Bugenhagen (b)(6)

From: alicespalmer@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Alice Palmer (b)(6)

From: lewoldham@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lewis Oldham (b)(6)

From: randydmcnally@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Randy McNally (b)(6)

From: jreimertravels@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. If we are truly "following the science" in this case, this would not be an issue. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Jenna Reimer

(b)(6)

From: jimrice@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. James Rice (b)(6)

From: Lizbethpener@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Beth B Pener (b)(6)

From: z32757@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Harold Hanks (b)(6)

From: beth.mcbee@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Beth McBee (b)(6)

From: em3pad@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Michael Calandro Sr [REDACTED] (b)(6) Ps. Please keep in mind that the development of the children are the responsibility of the parents, NOT the governments NOR the teachers Union!

From: j_valet@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them and your God-given moral sense to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Please don't capitulate to the LGBTQ agenda. Thank you! Mr. Jared Valet

(b)(6)

From: broughton64@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Hal Broughton (b)(6)

From: jerri.dngldn@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Jerri Dingledine (b)(6)

From: chickencluck@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Susan Lenhart (b)(6)

From: jimpeggyadams@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Peggy Adams (b)(6)

From: pastorashmore@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Stephen Ashmore (b)(6)

From: mattgrubbs@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Matthew Grubbs (b)(6)

From: plancaster2u@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Penny Lancaster (b)(6)

From: stekelvarken@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Cornelia PJ Miller Sr. (b)(6)

From: tbfurr@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Timothy Furr (b)(6)

From: pilkingt3@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Virgil Pilkington (b)(6)

From: vagrantmind@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Encouraging gender dysphoria guarantees the child will have continued psychological difficulties throughout their life. Such encouragement is abuse. Eventually, courts will side with truth, science, and the best interest of both parents and their children, rejecting delusion based on political and emotional bias. True science requires proven facts. Those facts based on truth are immutable. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. David Smith (b)(6)

From: gmiller1932@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. William Miller (b)(6)

From: sbritton@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Seth Britton (b)(6)

From: rlas1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Roger Andrews (b)(6)

From: gabiron12@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Ron Meadows (b)(6)

From: sanders.melody@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Melody Sanders (b)(6)

From: tilford@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Michael Tilford (b)(6)

From: annheape@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ann Heape (b)(6)

From: starherm@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Linda Herman (b)(6)

From: iccz2001@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ian Castro (b)(6)

From: ginagamble@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Gina Gamble (b)(6)

From: afu7512@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Albert Underwood (b)(6)

From: familyyearick@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Kim E Yearick (b)(6)

From: I_savka@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lyubov Stakhov (b)(6)

From: logsdond201@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Donna Logsdon (b)(6)

From: vetnox4@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Phyllis Haig (b)(6)

From: tom@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Tom Garbach (b)(6)

From: pdvjev@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Pete Vichi (b)(6)

From: ahsjr@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Armando Sablo Jr. (b)(6)

From: harrisstephen@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Stephen Harris (b)(6)

From: Godchaser46@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kristy Billingslea (b)(6)

From: suebeeinaz@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sue Coleman (b)(6)

From: patricklyons42@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a public hearing to gather information for the purpose of revising enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Have you evaluated what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue? Any rule making by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when deviant ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. You have no right to selectively misinterpret the intent of Title in order to propagate an immoral ideology. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and the vast majority do not consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope that you keep these thoughts and suggestions in mind and avoid any actions that would corrupt the intentions of Title IX. Thank you! Mr. and Mrs. Patrick J. Lyons Sr. (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: ljgroen@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Loretta Groen (b)(6)

From: cgitibin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Cyndi Gitibin (b)(6)

From: lindamath@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). As a teacher in public school for the last 31 years, I have seen how powerfully girls sports have helped girls succeed and raise above reaching beyond what they thought their potential could be. Title IX has been the great equalizer for women's sports. To now allow biological boys to play/compete against girls goes against all that we know about the biological differences in the sexes. There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mrs. Linda Johnson

(b)(6)

From: eric.carlsgaard@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Please pay attention to concerned citizens... I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you for your careful consideration, Eric Carlsgaard (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: rdegen2000@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Rick Degenhardt (b)(6)

From: sandra_hensley@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sandra Hensley (b)(6)

From: volleyballmum@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Candice Mitrik (b)(6)

From: kmheisler@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kay Heisler (b)(6)

From: ports4144@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration, not to mention the fact that it is probably unconstitutional. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. B. Timothy Allport (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: destinationministries@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pastor Perry Bell (b)(6)

From: cwedding14@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Connie Wedding (b)(6)

From: m.charles11203@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Makeda Charles (b)(6)

From: oregondriver7@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. David L Driver (b)(6)

From: larrys909@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Larry Schairer (b)(6)

From: tyrojh@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jan Housman (b)(6)

From: mikeray@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Mike Ray (b)(6)

From: evmart91@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Eric Martinez (b)(6)

From: dmensch@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Dale Mensch (b)(6)

From: philip.c.irvin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Philip Irvin (b)(6)

From: mrpeschel@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mark Peschel (b)(6)

From: eetrizinsky@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Eugene Trizinsky (b)(6)

From: wendy.dandridge@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Wendy Dandridge (b)(6)

From: deborah@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. Title IX regulations were established to protect our children and youth, while providing a safe environment for girls to compete in sports, and youth to learn and grow securely in the safety of their person and mind. The changes made by the Biden DOE work contrary to the intentions of Title IX and make our children and youth unsafe in so many ways. I recommend the following: First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Yes, Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. I have grandchildren in our public schools and support parents who want to protect their children as well. Thank you! Deborah Reisdorph, Esq. (b)(6)

From: doreenreichard@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Doreen Reichard (b)(6)

From: jaduerk@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

James Duerk (b)(6)

From: abraomorenimwen@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Abraham Oboruemuh (b)(6)

From: jamesmiller@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. James Miller (b)(6)

From: carolyn.gehrett@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Carolyn Gehrett (b)(6)

From: reagangk@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Glenda Reagan (b)(6)

From: gburkett@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Greg Burkett (b)(6)

From: topcat3515@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Thomas Cusack [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: oakesn@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Norman Oakes (b)(6)

From: markn70714@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mark Novak [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: golfingbuddy70@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Anne Donovan (b)(6)

From: manny@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Manuel O Garcia (b)(6)

From: jadams5254@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jan Adams (b)(6)

From: cmwm2000@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Catherine Marketto (b)(6)

From: pastorchrissweet@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Christopher Sweet (b)(6)

From: stephanieflater@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Stephanie Flater (b)(6)

From: russ.marino@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Russell Marino (b)(6)

From: rwagner@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Randy Wagner (b)(6)

From: jjtbarj@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jamie Amos (b)(6)

From: elaine.torma14@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Please do the right thing for all the children and families of this country and do not bow to the Left extremists who wish to tell us how to act, what to be, how to educate our children, what politics to follow, etc. etc. Show us some courage on your part so we can believe that our whole government is not corrupt and socialist already!! I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Elaine Torma

(b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: tischglynda5@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Glynda Tischmacher { (b)(6) }

From: blah6052@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Joshua Cardenez (b)(6)

From: pinkprovocateur@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Daria Outhwaite (b)(6)

From: grlynch1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gerald Lynch (b)(6)

From: Truetexanyall@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Shannon De La Cruz (b)(6)

From: mvenckus@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mary Venckus (b)(6)

From: terri.greiner77@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Teresa Greiner (b)(6)

From: vickilynne13@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Vicki Johnson (b)(6)

From: brentburke13@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Brent Burke (b)(6)

From: 916mary@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mary Seri (b)(6)

From: pokerguytony@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

John Cenc (b)(6)

From: glitzo1460@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gregory Litzo (b)(6)

From: quambacubs34@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Steven Peterson (b)(6)

From: Rjlucero76801@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Rhonda Lucero (b)(6)

From: Mickiefairburn@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Michaelene Fairburn (b)(6)

From: lbcaldwell2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Louie Caldwell (b)(6)

From: menotyou17@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kathleen Shepard (b)(6)

From: lynn.schantzfarms@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lynn Schantz (b)(6)

From: dlcampbell9@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dennis Campbell (b)(6)

From: skybaby_98134@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dawn Steinlage (b)(6)

From: john@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. John Helmberger (b)(6)

From: debizcool@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Debra Paniagua (b)(6)

From: mmchugh@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mary-Margaret McHugh (b)(6)

From: bkclinton@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Billy F Clington (b)(6)

From: lizscrawford@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Elizabeth Steele (b)(6)

From: rvernonkirk@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Robert Vernon Kirk (b)(6)

From: stevemom_us@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Steve Penrod (b)(6)

From: mmcbride56@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Michael McBride (b)(6)

From: enajera1980@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Eric Najera (b)(6)

From: dklaskowski@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Daniel Laskowski (b)(6)

From: nkdearth@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Nancy Dearth (b)(6)

From: Artheathcock@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Arthur Heathcock (b)(6)

From: losinski@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Donald Losinski [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: gene.scarberry@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Eugene Scarberry (b)(6)

From: jag77717@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Julie Gillespie (b)(6)

From: dhcarlisle@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dean Carlisle (b)(6)

From: patti@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Patti Warneke (b)(6)

From: kipp306@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

William Wilson (b)(6)

From: nancy.littlefield@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Nancy Littlefield (b)(6)

From: wenwright@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Wendy Wright (b)(6)

From: jodylong@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jody Long (b)(6)

From: 4utammyq@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Tamara Verdick (b)(6)

From: rkreiser61@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Randall Kreiser (b)(6)

From: rachaelm@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Rachael Kibbee (b)(6)

From: sstarr@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Steve Starr (b)(6)

From: nac217cole@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

MS Nancy Cole (b)(6)

From: Bennydaplumba@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. William Belmore (b)(6)

From: mark@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pastor Mark Purl (b)(6)

From: Drrogerevans@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Roger Evans (b)(6)

From: frank@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Frank Curtis (b)(6)

From: Jennavansusteren@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Jennifer Van Susteren (b)(6)

From: mdcampi@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Mark Campi (b)(6)

From: terp97@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Frederic Revah (b)(6)

From: dlizperry@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dana Perry (b)(6)

From: benjamin.messer@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Benjamin Messer (b)(6)

From: bvonhuben@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

William Von Huben (b)(6)

From: hptwilson@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Heather Wilson (b)(6)

From: brenda.alpert@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex, or creating a new category for biological males that believe they are female. Note--Biological females that identify as male have no chance to fairly compete with biological males either. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Brenda Alpert (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: rayshaventura@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Raysha Montenegro (b)(6)

From: mamahart5_99@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Michelle Hartvigsen (b)(6)

From: J.froemming@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

JoAnne Froemming [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: llbalaw@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lori Rimar (b)(6)

From: wmielke@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Walter Mielke (b)(6)

From: bowhunt1956@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Nancy Anslow (b)(6)

From: jayhawk31@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Heidi Morgan (b)(6)

From: srtsamson@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Theresa Samson (b)(6)

From: brenda@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Brenda Milthaler (b)(6)

From: karan.roberts@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Karan Roberts (b)(6)

From: bmc_mark@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Marc Brittain (b)(6)

From: dagriffin1959@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Deborah Griffin (b)(6)

From: jcrumpton487@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. James Crumpton (b)(6)

From: tingle.tim@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Please keep these thoughts and suggestions in mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Tim Tingle (b)(6)

From: mlcooper@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Michael Cooper (b)(6)

From: dennis.vargas@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Dennis Vargas (b)(6)

From: jennifersripley@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Jennifer Ripley (b)(6)

From: james.foote@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. James Foote (b)(6)

From: jill.gonzalez16@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jill Gonzalez (b)(6)

From: Modonnell53@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Our children's education should be focused on academics. It is my understanding that as a nation we are woefully lacking in math and science compared to many other countries. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Margaret Layden (b)(6) Please do not put me on a mailing list

From: nbaconak@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Neil Bacon (b)(6)

From: romavon@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Mary Vaughan (b)(6)

From: dianebrowncl@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Diane Brown (b)(6)

From: tammiehansberger@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Tammie Hansberger (b)(6)

From: net2merc47@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Annette Ryder (b)(6)

From: mcsanti@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mary Sloan-Santiago (b)(6)

From: nhisprsence@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Martha Atkins (b)(6)

From: cmb4him@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Thomas E Baur (b)(6)

From: Rsjr@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ron Smith Jr (b)(6)

From: fisch050@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). Title IX clearly means biological sex. Trying to twist it into something it isn't is nothing more than a gross abuse of power, a misuse of your position, and a giant middle finger to America, to girls, to women, and to sports. It You are proposing to grossly disfigure Title IX, and to turn it into something it was clearly never meant to be. There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Jonathan Fischer

(b)(6)

From: ctaylor333@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Charles Taylor (b)(6)

From: hannerkt@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I'm contacting you regarding the virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. I believe rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kaye Hansen (b)(6)

From: claudiac@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Claudia Clark (b)(6)

From: dnleyk76@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dan Leyk (b)(6)

From: kolache55@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Rene McCartney (b)(6)

From: chessica32@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Chessica Porterfield [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: linda@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Linda Bellomy (b)(6)

From: david@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). As a parent of four children, my greatest desire is to see them educated and prepared for the future. Education consists of mastering the basic skills needed to succeed in today's world. The role of the public schools does not include the moral and psychological molding of children. I ask you to refrain from imposing the view of a very limited group of radical people on the lives of American children through sexual indoctrination and the stealing of their innocence. Please do not implement the discarding of Title IX based on biology and fairness for female student athletes. Thank you! Mr. David Teran (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: carolm985@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Carol McCloud (b)(6)

From: diaz7161@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Mario Diaz (b)(6)

From: drhowell1234@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dennis Howell (b)(6)

From: flyntflorence@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. There are only two genders male and female. Thank you! Florence Flynt (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: larrylaughlin9@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Larry Laughlin (b)(6)

From: dmdoran40@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Donna Doran (b)(6)

From: Samicenhour@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pastor Sam Icenhour (b)(6)

From: sbruser52@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

S Bruser (b)(6)

From: stephenpeery@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Stephen Peery (b)(6)

From: cbelvin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Cecilia Belvin (b)(6)

From: connie_hillman77@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Connie Hillman (b)(6)

From: snbinns47@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Susan Binns (b)(6)

From: golfingbuddy70@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Anne Donovan (b)(6)

From: rpd932@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

David Valliant (b)(6)

From: clbitters5@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Conrad Bitters (b)(6)

From: cmstewart54@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Cindy Stewart (b)(6)

From: paris95969@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Mary Dunaway (b)(6)

From: growthis@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Butch Groothuis (b)(6)

From: rmm4life@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

RoseMary Mantelli (b)(6)

From: angieeichhornklarke@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Angela R Klarke (b)(6)

From: nolleyken@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Ken Nolley (b)(6)

From: manasseh63@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jeff Bailey (b)(6)

From: jrhosey@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jimmy Hosey (b)(6)

From: miltonmanse@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Patricia Milton (b)(6)

From: McAuley825@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Paulette McAuley (b)(6)

From: jeffnastali@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jeff Nastali (b)(6)

From: smonforton@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Steven Monforton (b)(6)

From: hudge76@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Brian Hudgins (b)(6)

From: me@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Michael English (b)(6)

From: jenkml@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Margaret Jenkins (b)(6)

From: jillhuitron@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Jill Huitron (b)(6)

From: tdaltonjr@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Thomas Dalton (b)(6)

From: petsrus2002@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. John Rattazzo (b)(6)

From: lucashedding@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Lucas Hedding (b)(6)

From: GRICHTER@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Grant Richter (b)(6)

From: jazminqua@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jasmine Howard (b)(6)

From: mellygbe@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Melanie Bruno (b)(6)

From: jehobden@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jon Hobden (b)(6)

From: Jim.pedigo46@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jim Pedigo (b)(6)

From: kpmcguck@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Kevin McGuckin (b)(6)

From: jimmar415@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. James Molinaro (b)(6)

From: Diane.stephens@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Diane Stephens (b)(6)

From: xanderturner@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dawn Turner (b)(6)

From: tkahelin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Thomas Kahelin (b)(6)

From: dsnow47@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Douglas Snow (b)(6)

From: rob@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robert Strieter (b)(6)

From: netwalton@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Margaret Walton (b)(6)

From: diaz7161@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs Dawn Diaz (b)(6)

From: pjtec4@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pete Larson (b)(6)

From: Casesti@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:00:01 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Carlos Sesti (b)(6)

From: cathy4228@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Catherine Riley (b)(6)

From: rosaliebritton@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Rosalie Britton (b)(6)

From: clwright62@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Chris Wright (b)(6)

From: dk23@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Donald Krebbs (b)(6)

From: alsiders@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Allan Siders (b)(6)

From: rrsheriff@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Randall Sheriff (b)(6)

From: bernard@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Bernard Vlach (b)(6)

From: davjomatz@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. David Matz (b)(6)

From: jimsbentnail@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. James Norman (b)(6)

From: jdmilmin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jeffrey Miller (b)(6)

From: swattingmoth@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Christopher Jordan (b)(6)

From: homerjohnroodsr@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Homer Rood (b)(6)

From: coachreese@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. John Reeser (b)(6)

From: blsankey@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Brue Sankey (b)(6)

From: brewerin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Erin Brewer (b)(6)

From: fuelcoupe@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. James Rohrer (b)(6)

From: Thebo1974@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Esther Thebo (b)(6)

From: jremyh@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. John Remy (b)(6)

From: JCORM74@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. John Cormier (b)(6)

From: anyangelanywhere@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Angela Nicholas (b)(6)

From: kkgjwint@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Gerald Winter (b)(6)

From: chewierocks13@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Stephen Donaldson (b)(6)

From: tlmcfm1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Thomas Martens (b)(6)

From: foxluetta@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

David and Luetta Fox (b)(6)

From: roadking2222@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Tom Vette (b)(6)

From: candymcclaid@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Candace McClaid (b)(6)

From: hollieshoup@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Hollie Shoup (b)(6)

From: j_lemley@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations I want you to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, please evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Please give extensive consideration to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation in accordance with their worldview. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Biological males and biological females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Please keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! John Lemley (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: ggwjr@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Greg Wilson (b)(6)

From: beejean50@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Barbara Holmberg (b)(6)

From: purplemoose1969@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Janice Crays (b)(6)

From: tonidreed4@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Toni Reed (b)(6)

From: joanne.g@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Joanne Godlewsky (b)(6)

From: drsulittle@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sue Frounfelter (b)(6)

From: ldboston47@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Larry Boston

(b)(6)

From: sandygarcia622@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sandra Garcia (b)(6)

From: tlc_nw@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Tonya Clark (b)(6)

From: ditzenbergers@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Stacey Ditzenberger (b)(6)

From: janducan11@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Janice Duncan (b)(6)

From: darleneferne@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Darlene Anderson (b)(6)

From: brennannancy@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Nancy Brennan (b)(6)

From: jagwill@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Judith Williamson (b)(6)

From: abbie.brigham@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Gratefully, Mrs. Abigail Baldrige

From: Jebirkley@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Lyle Birkley (b)(6)

From: conneran@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Carmen Conneran (b)(6)

From: mhscpa@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Mark Schrader (b)(6)

From: drvjohnson2003@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Virginia Johnson (b)(6)

From: jesshuff73@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jessica Huff (b)(6)

From: debbie.l.rowe@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Douglas Rowe (b)(6)

From: mande.barden@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Amanda Barden (b)(6)

From: rvandegrift@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights and our rights to impart morality upon our heirs. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Randy Vandegrift (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: braziellessonplans@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is left to the states and local authorities; it is constitutionally protected from federal incursion. Furthermore, politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to concepts like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not supposed gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. Keep these matters in mind as you review Title IX. Regards, Bradley Braziel (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: tbwass@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Teresa Wass (b)(6)

From: Harold@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Harold Kimble (b)(6)

From: westcj1933@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Catherine West (b)(6)

From: debbie@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Debra Moore (b)(6)

From: frodshamr@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Randolph Frodsham (b)(6)

From: 1firedancer47@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sharon Bryan (b)(6)

From: lancasterterry52@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Christy Lancaster (b)(6)

From: brisgram@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Linda Spencer (b)(6)

From: tdholcomb123@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Tonya Holcomb (b)(6)

From: susanlinger@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Susan Linger (b)(6)

From: demand@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Nancy Christmas (b)(6)

From: eskranger@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Edward Kalbach (b)(6)

From: irina.avtsin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Irina Avtsin (b)(6)

From: jerrykautza@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jerome Kautza (b)(6)

From: skl341@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sheryl Leach (b)(6)

From: elffries@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lisa Fries (b)(6)

From: ae4pq@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Vince Cordaro (b)(6)

From: jackie42smith@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Kenneth E Smith (b)(6)

From: jimrolzitto@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

James Rolzitto (b)(6)

From: scumming1959@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Sharon Cumming (b)(6)

From: chin.wendymarie@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Wendy Chin (b)(6)

From: dpagard@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

David Pagard (b)(6)

From: robertofgranite@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Robert Osborne (b)(6)

From: lorrainefranks@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Lorraine Franks (b)(6)

From: dr.dennishansen@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Dennis Hansen (b)(6)

From: anita.harbin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Anita Harbin (b)(6)

From: bobemling@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Robert Emling (b)(6)

From: mark3965@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mark Campbell (b)(6)

From: marlaine.lavine@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Nor do they want their children being taught Critical Race Theory. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, NOT gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Marlaine Lavine (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: g.p.j.ore@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Greg Johnson (b)(6)

From: aga1954@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Miss Ann DeBenedetto (b)(6)

From: danyelle.m.tidwell@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Danyelle Tidwell (b)(6)

From: bksattler@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Don't steal my daughter's future. Thank you! Mr. Brian Sattler

(b)(6)

From: kirkchristian@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kirk Christian (b)(6)

From: jdoerge@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. James Doerge (b)(6)

From: imc.path@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ruth Rauch (b)(6)

From: phlkennedy@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Philip Kennedy (b)(6)

From: drchuckles3@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Dr. Charles H Staab III (b)(6)

From: abcollier@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Aaron Collier (b)(6)

From: kathygross43@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kathleen Gross (b)(6)

From: aseltine71@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Douglas Aseltine (b)(6)

From: patterwc@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Wallace Patterson (b)(6)

From: tina@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Tina Stanley (b)(6)

From: kre_eepa@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Kenny Epperson (b)(6)

From: sleepyhobbit@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Hector Gautier (b)(6)

From: shellybotkin1965@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Shelly Botkin (b)(6)

From: pennybill44@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Anne Foster (b)(6)

From: Stackey@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Sd D Ellmore (b)(6)

From: eidets@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Margrethe Eidet (b)(6)

From: estherfellows@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Esther Fellows (b)(6)

From: irina.avtsin@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Irina Avtsin (b)(6)

From: michaellwel@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Michael Welage (b)(6)

From: flamingoqueen@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Deanna Inclan (b)(6)

From: edw920@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Evelyn Whittington (b)(6)

From: hopper.darren@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Darren Hopper (b)(6)

From: summers121110@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Craig Summers (b)(6)

From: kcputtytat@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Kim Campbell [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: jrlentner@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Joseph Lentner (b)(6)

From: nancyhrh@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Ms. Nancy Sutton (b)(6)

From: belizescubadiver@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Greg Powell (b)(6)

From: barb@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Barb Rieke (b)(6)

From: bmthomas3499@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Beverly Thomas (b)(6)

From: jimbarbpitts@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Pastor James L Pitts (b)(6)

From: andy.ackermann@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Andrew Ackermann (b)(6)

From: helenrr8@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Helen Ramirez (b)(6)

From: dankeetch@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Dan Keetch Jr. (b)(6)

From: djdemas@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Donald Demas (b)(6)

From: harriettmartha@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Harriett Mcgetrick (b)(6)

From: Aebforgiven@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Aileen Boone (b)(6)

From: azwiremail@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Merle Cunningham (b)(6)

From: augsbach@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Linda J Augsbach (b)(6)

From: rthompson56@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Robert B Thompson [REDACTED] (b)(6)

From: charlieblack@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Charlie Black (b)(6)

From: Rbrown440@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Rodney Brown (b)(6)

From: vrolling@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Virginia Rolling (b)(6)

From: jerrykautza@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Judith Kautza (b)(6)

From: jlatta6@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jeff Latta (b)(6)

From: dzspence573@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Danny Spence (b)(6)

From: brianeleanor@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Brian Blanchard (b)(6)

From: bdtoconnor@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Brendan OConnor (b)(6)

From: daniel@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Daniel Baldwin (b)(6)

From: Csosin7@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Carolyn Sosin (b)(6)

From: buddybear0609@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:48:35 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Philip Micha Rosney (b)(6)

From: m_d_mankins@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:15:58 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Martin Mankins (b)(6)

From: fabbris2@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:15:58 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Jennifer Fabbri (b)(6)

From: jeffburroughs76@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:04:29 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Jeff Burroughs (b)(6)

From: laurabates1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 22:04:29 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Laura Bates (b)(6)

From: All.natural.XRAYgirl.2006@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 21:10:29 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Tracey Johnson (b)(6)

From: rcharette@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:32:50 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored by including gender identity and not just the biological/genetic sex of the child. Protecting women and girls' right to sports includes the rights of transgender athletes to compete as their preferred gender. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Russell Charette (b)(6)

From: kborules@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 03:57:43 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Kent Bowden (b)(6)

From: alan50burch@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 03:26:51 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing . Please take deep consideration on your measures for this issue as your God given right. God and your people are watching

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Alan Burch (b)(6)

From: laura38203@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:22:22 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing and NO LGBT TOPICS SHOULD BE IN THE SCHOOLS!

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Laura Piekara (b)(6)

From: tontotx9@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing Improvements

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am deeply concerned. I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. By implementing LGBT-type policies, you will only further divide society, forcing more families to opt-out of public education, at a detriment to the future of our society. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Kyle Groves

(b)(6)

From: smithjan99@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 03:34:30 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Janice Smith (b)(6)

From: linda_lutz_1@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 02:07:02 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing-Huge Fairness Issue!

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Linda Lutz (b)(6)

From: bvnagel@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I'm concerned for my granddaughters if title IX is changed. There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Brian Nagel (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: scoce1982@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 01:33:33 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment:we have 2 grandchildren who are gay, and we are begging you NOT to do away with Title IX. Common sense must prevail. Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

George and Faye Campbell (b)(6)

From: beth.kassebaum@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:22:22 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comments on Title IX Public Hearing

Acting Director Goldberg, I write to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Finally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Beth Kassebaum (b)(6)

From: sdjemale@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Fri, 28 May 2021 01:12:14 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comments: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some VERY IMPORTANT considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, please evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an ABUSE OF POWER by the Biden administration. EDUCATION IS A STATE AND LOCAL MATTER, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has NO place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. PARENTS are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a VIOLATION OF PUBLIC TRUST and PARENTAL RIGHTS. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX PROTECTIONS FOR GIRLS SPORTS are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Mr. Steven D Johnson (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: magsknoff@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mrs. Mags Knoff (b)(6)

From: gwainabq@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing regarding the US Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights' announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important thing you should consider as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, please evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. I consider rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation to be an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you! Chuck Akeley (b)(6)

(b)(6)

From: maryl@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mary Livermore (b)(6)

From: Webster_sailor@grassrootsmessages.com
Sent: Thu, 27 May 2021 23:11:24 +0000
To: T9PublicHearing
Subject: Written Comment: Title IX Public Hearing

Dear Acting Director Goldberg, I am writing to you regarding the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) announcement of a virtual public hearing to gather information for the purpose of improving enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Title IX). You should be respecting parental rights and protecting schoolchildren, particularly young girls! There are some very important considerations you need to be aware of as you conduct your review of the Title IX regulations. First, you should evaluate what legal ability you have to undertake any measures you ultimately decide to pursue. Any rulemaking by the Department of Education on gender identity and sexual orientation is an abuse of power by the Biden administration. Education is a state and local matter, protected by law from federal incursion. Politics has no place in K-12 education, especially when ideologies are forced on parents and students from the federal level. Should you continue to proceed, there ought to be extensive consideration given to parental rights. Parents are the primary arbiters of their children's education; they send their children to school to learn and do not necessarily consent to controversial topics like Queer Theory being taught to or practiced on their children. Doing so without their consent is a violation of public trust and parental rights. Children with questions about identity should be referred back to their parents for guidance so that parents can address the situation as their family beliefs dictate. Additionally, Title IX protections for girls' sports are important and must be honored based on sex, not gender identity. Males and females need to compete separately due to issues of fairness, risk of physical injury, and privacy. Protecting women and girls' right to sports does not stop transgender athletes from competing in sports on teams that align with their biological sex. I hope you keep these thoughts and suggestions at the forefront of your mind and allow them to guide your actions as you review Title IX. Thank you!

Mr. Stephen Perich (b)(6)