I have been in a battle to accept my race. Now in my 30's I can honestly say I like myself inside and out. I attribute most of it to my mother but my up bringing as well. I went to an all girls catholic high school in my most important and formative years I was so out going with my peers and the staff men and women was so encouraging of us girls. I liked bringing in an all girls school and sometimes forgot I was. Classes were hard being more about getting into college and my favorite creative writing class where I learned about myself. I was free in high school and friends with every group but had my own click. This is how it should be not to learn to hate each other but see our differences but curious to know our similarities brought out by our education to ready us for the world. I reflect on all my good and bad days of high school and I had plenty of good ones surprising because I did go to an all girls school. Don't teach difference that's a given teach new experiences through art.

Now because of this new ideology I fear that development for young adults will be lost. The bill IX is not how you set up are youth to win. It's just the Trojan horse to other bad ideas. Please don't pass.
