The Department of Education is proposing a "comprehensive review" of Title IX, and I write to oppose any revision of the Rule enacted by Secretary DeVos in the prior administration. That revised Rule explicitly requires basic due process guarantees such as the presumption of innocence, the right to see evidence, and, most importantly, the right to a live hearing and cross-examination at the college level.

It is totally within Constitutional responsibility to maintain these due process guarantees.

To undo the Rule as it now exists, in part or in toto, is to brutally violate the civil rights of men in colleges nationwide under the Bill of Rights.

I urge the maintenance of the Rule as it is currently established, without any revision or deletion.
