I am the mother of a young man who was wrongly accused of sexual misconduct at college in 2016. Despite the fact that he had clear and convincing evidence of his innocence of claims, he was denied due process. Instead, he was subject to swift and false judgement with abandonment by his peers. He was silenced and endured isolation and a virtual lack of supportive services by the school. He was denied access to his rights as a student, including his ability to participate in a capstone event that was crucial to the launching of the profession for which he had trained hard and in earnest and was the right of all students in his program. My son's outcome would have been nothing like the hell that he endured and still struggles with if the current Title IX regulations were in effect when he was falsely accused. I strongly urge that fairness and due process in Title IX proceedings be preserved.
